The Kind of a Ticket Nominated Yesterday.

ANYTHING TO WIN OFFICE.

Three Conventions and What They Did —Masterly Strategy and Its Results A Successful Bluff by Disgruntled "Republicans."

How wonderful is Colorado Springs favored. Two three ring circuses in one week. The Barnum & Bailey aggregation was not in it with the three-ring and tank show that performed here yesterday, the Demo - Pop - Independent conventions There was much doubt at first whether the management would ever be able to get all of the show under one tent, but it was accomplished at a late hour late evening. A ticket was named as follows: Sheriff, George Vaux of this city, Independent Republican; treasurer, F. Caley of Victor, Populist; assessor, A. Armentrout of this city, Populist; county clerk, J. H. Thedinga of this city, Democrat; surveyor, J. F. Smith of Cripple Creek, Populist; coroner, R. Logan of Falcon, Populist; superintendent of schools, Miss Lyle Harris of Manitou, Populist; county commissioner, Cal Husted of Colorado City, Populist.

The work began at an early hour yesterday morning and there was heaps of talk. It became apparent early in the day that the Populists were going to hog everything in sight, and if they did not get about everything there was in the "fusion" they would go off and flock by themselves. M. A. Leddy, who had been a candidate for sheriff, saw what was coming, and was shrewd enough to get out of it early in the day. Soon after the Independents named their committee on reference it became known that Len Jackson was not in it. While the Populists did not name the candidate for sheriff, they practically dictated it, and George Vaux, a dark horse, was run in. The Democrats had a big convention, for them, but they did not cut much ice either. The Cripple Creekers wanted Jim Graham, but the Colorado Springs Democrats were too much in the majority and named J. H. Thedinga. For some reason the Populists looked upon these two offices as the chief of the picking, and grumbled like everything, although they were told that they could name six others. They did finally submit and picked out the men they wanted.

It was a funny thing, take it all through. On the one hand was Sam McDonald and John Calderwood acting together on the same committee, and there was Doc Mayfield of Cripple Creek and Tom Maloney on the other. Both must have thought of the workings of the American Poultry association as they came together. But A. P. and "red-neck" did not go yesterday in that feast of union and brotherly love.

After the mountain had labored and it was seen what had come forth, there was much dissatisfaction expressed and some inclination to laugh at some of the selections made. There certainly was reason to laugh at the way they were made. There was no pretense of principle in the whole business. So long as the Democrats and the bolters got an office apiece, they were willing to swallow anybody the Populists wanted for the rest of the ticket. Nobody ventured to speak of "the middle of the road," they were all willing to take to the ditches. Anything to beat hte "gang," was the war-cry; anything to get an office, the real motive. The Pop convention was run by "Judge" Burton on parliamentary principles evolved from his own inner consciousness. For instance, a motion was made and carried to nominate a coroner. Three candidates were named., and a ballot was ordered. At this stage a member of the conference committee moved that the selection of coroner be left to that committee., as Altman had not been recognized, a place which as the head center of the Miners' union ought to have a place on the ticket. The motion was put, and the chair was in doubt, and started to order a ballot on it. At this point the mover withdrew the motion. Another delegate then moved to reconsider it, but Burton told him the motion had been withdrawn and could not be reconsidered; at which he exclaimed: "Mr. Chairman, a motion to reconsider is always in order." But Burton was firm, so the delegate shouted "Then I move it again!" "All right," said the chairman. "I'll put that." And he did put it, and it was lost, and the vote for coroner went on.

The Independents.

The so-called Independent Republicans met in K. of P. hall yesterday morning and organized by the election of Dr. Mayfield as chairman and H. I. Bennett as secretary.

The objects of the meeting and the necessity of placing another Republican ticket in the field, were thoroughly discussed.

The convention decided to secure the assistance of the Populists and Democrats, if possible, and place a ticket in the field that could be supported by all irrespective of politics. To this end the chairman, on motion, appointed the following conference committee: Sam McDonald, John Houghton, Dr. Mayfield, J. C. Salisbury, Joe Strong, J. S. Lentz and William Davis. Mrs. McJohnson, who was appointed, declined to act.

The convention gave its committee full power to act in the selection of a ticket and adjourned. They did not get together again to ratify. The committee also appointed a committee of three to help the others in the campaign.

The Democrats.

The Democratic convention met at 3 o'clock in division No. 1 of the courthouse, and they had the largest attendance for some time.

Phil Strubel, chairman of the Democratic central committee, called the convention to order at 3 p. m.

The reading of the call was on motion dispensed with.

J. W. Stillman was unanimously chosen temporary chairman, and T. B. Pyles was selected as secretary.

On motion the chairman appointed as a committee on credentials Messrs. W. W. Price, C. W. Hathaway and George Kennedy.

Colonel Montgomery moved that a committee of five on permanent organization and order of business be appointed by the chair. Adopted.

The chair appointed Messrs. H. P. Montgomery, A. D. Jones, T. J. Mulcahy, H. H. Seldomridge and Mrs. Goddard.

Shortly before 4:30 p. m. both committees reported and their reports were adopted.

A committee on conference was then appointed to confer with like committees from the Populist and rump Republican conventions relative to agreeing upon a fusion ticket to be supported by all three parties. This committee was composed of H. L. Shepherd of Cripple Creek, H. H. Seldomridge, A. L. Lawton, Colonel Ervay, Frank Pingree, all of this city; Homer Snyder of Manitou, and Thomas Maloney of Cripple Creek.

A recess was taken until 7 o'clock to hear the report of the committee. At that hour the delegates assembled but the Populists were then naming the ticket, so they waited patiently until nearly 10. At last the committee reported the nominations. Several speeches were made by Colonel Montgomery, H. H. Seldomridge and others and the ticket was finally adopted. A central committee was named and authorized to act with the other committees in pushing the ticket. H. H. Seldomridge was selected as chairman. Colonel Montgomery presented resolutions that were of a fire-eating nature. The convention adjourned at a late hour.

The Populists.

The Populists held their convention in division No. 1 of the District Court and had a room full of delegates and spectators. It was a characteristic Populist convention if there ever was one, both in its personnel and the way it was conducted. It was worse than an Indian pow wow for heap talk. It ground away constantly most of the day and away into the night.

Delegate Todd of Cripple Creek nominated J. Knox Burton of the gold district, for temporary chairman. He was unanimously elected.

Judge Johnson of this city nominated C. E. Sabin for temporary secretary, and he was unanimously elected.

Delegate Leonard moved that a committee of seven on credentials be appointed by the chair.

Mr. Leonard moved that where precincts were only partially represented, those who were present from such precinct should be allowed to cast the full vote of the delegation. Motion adopted.

The chair appointed the credentials committee as follows: J. E. Carroll, Ed Kinzey, J. Y. Nichols, Mrs. De Tolliver, W. A. Love, Ed Nestor and Mrs. E. L. C. Dwinell.

Dr. Sinton moved a committee of five on rules and order of business be appointed. Adopted. The following were appointed: Dr. Sinton, Owen Prentiss, W. E. Roady, A. Armentrout and Frank Wolfe.

Delegate Johnson moved that a committee of five on permanent organization be appointed immediately after the report of the credentials committee.

Sam Yarnell moved that a committee of five be appointed on resolutions and all resolutions be handed to such committee before being read to the convention.

The committee on credentials reported at 11:35 that there were no contests and that 26 precincts were represented by 179 delegates.

The committee on rules and order of business then made its report and recommendations; the report was adopted.

On motion of Owen Prentiss the temporary organization was made permanent.

Mrs. E. L. C. Dwinell was unanimously elected assistant secretary.

John McCoach, W. E. Roady, Mrs. Benedict, Nichols and W. H. Rodgers were appointed a committee on resolutions.

The question of appointing a conference committee was then discussed. Judge Johnson and Mr. Carroll occupied the floor in an extended discussion.

Moved that the convention select the conference committee. Adopted.

On motion it was decided that the conference committee consist of seven members. The ballot resulted in the selection of the following: John Calderwood, J. E. Carroll, C. F. Trowbridge, J. M. Johnson, James Leonard, Miss L. Harris, M. C. Layden and P. H. Walsh.

The convention met again at 3 o'clock and the committee was not ready to report. The cottage home was selected as the emblem and the Colorado Springs delegates got together and named a precinct ticket. L. B. Farrar was named for justice of the peace and H. Brooks for constable.

At 7 o'clock the committee came in with the information that the Democrats and Independent Republicans had been given the naming of the candidates for clerk and sheriff and the Populists got the rest. There was a lot of grumbling and speech-making over this, but it was finally ratified. The convention then went to electing candidates.

Frank Caley was selected for treasurer without a contest. A. Armentrout was selected for assessor in the same way.

For surveyor, F. T. Smith and N. Wilson had a contest, and Smith was chosen by a big vote.

For county judge, Knox Burton and L. W. Cunningham of Colorado City were named, but Mr. Cunningham got up and declared he did not want it. The convention paid him very much of a compliment by voting for him any way. The vote stood 105 for Burton and 74 for Cunningham.

Dr. Logan of Falcon was chosen for coroner, over Manley of Victor, 162 to 17.

Miss Lyle Harris had no opposition for school superintendent. Cal Husted was chosen for county commissioner by 167 against 19 for Captain Rogers of Manitou.

The committee again retired and in about an hour returned.

The ticket reported by them was nominated.

A committee of four, to act with the other committees, was selected, composed of John Calderwood, C. J. Todd, O. F. Ingraham and Mrs. Benedict.

How They will Do It.

The joint committees reported that the way the ballot is to be made up is that each convention will put in a ticket with its emblem. That will make five tickets on the ballot, Republican, Populist, Independent, Democrat and Prohibitionist. This may not be all, for some of the middle-of-the-road Democrats or Populists may decide that they want a simon-pure ticket to vote and put up one of their own.

Citizens' Convention.

The Citizens' convention was called to order at 2:30 p. m. in a vacant lot on West Pike's Peak avenue, pursuant to a call which had been posted on a telegraph pole for not less than six hours previously. Hon. Scullery Digus, whose name appeared first on the call, apologized for the meeting place. So many conventions were being held in the city it was impossible to get better quarters. He also said

WE WON AGAIN.

American College Athletes Surpass the English.

EIGHT OUT OF THE ELEVEN.

The Yale Men Win Two Thirds of the Events—But the Best Runner was English—Summary of the Day's Events.

New York, Oct. 5.—The last international event of importance in the year of 1895 was decided to-day at Manhattan field, when the sons of Old Eli triumphed over the crack athletes from the English 'varsity on the banks of the Cam and the blue of Yale was placed above the light blue banner of Cambridge in eight of the 11 events decided.

The long list of victories on land and water, which were placed to the credit of the Stars and Stripes as against the British lion and which made the year an eventful one in the annals of American sport, were fittingly concluded by the establishment of the supremacy of the champion American college over the premier athletic 'varsity.

The day was beautiful, though a trifle cool and between 8,000 and 9,000 persons paid for admission to the field and fully as many more availed themselves of the places of vantage overlooking the grounds.

The arrangements were excellent, and a noticeable improvement over other athletic meetings was the absence of the usual horde of useless officials.

The track and in-field were in splendid condition. There was quite a buzz of excitement when the Cantab pace, H. Wilding and E. H. Lewin, came out for the first event—the 100-yard dash—which developed into a round of applause when Billy Richards and Burnett followed in their dark jerseys with a big white "Y" on their breasts. The start was down-out of sight of the press stand, but when they came in view at 50 yards, it was readily seen that the first event was Yale's. Richards and Burnett led the light blues to the tape, which Richards broke a yard in front of Lewin. Wilding was beaten off.

Taking time as a standard, Cady had the foot of the Cantabs in the hurdle race on the track, in American style of movable hurdles, and for once his form was not amiss. At the fourth hurdle Cady had a slight lead of Pilkington, which he increased at the eighth, where Hatch also passed the light blue. Cady jumped better than he ever did before, and beat Hatch by about four feet. The Cambridge crack finished a yard and a half behind the winner, and knocked down three hurdles on the journey.

Fitzherbert, the English quarter-mile champion, was thought to have a very good chance in the 300-yard dash, but the long-striding Briton was practically never in the contest and Billy Richards landed the third straight victory for Yale, beating Cantab's second string, Lewin, by four feet. Fitzherbert was third, a yard behind Lewin.

There was only one man in the half-mile run, from start to finish, and that was Fred Seymour Horan, the Cambridge president, who made all the running, and won by 80 yards from the Yale representative, Crane.

The half-mile and mile were virtually conceded to the light blues, as Yale had no one fast enough for either Horan or Lutiens. The latter cut the pace to suit himself and the time, 4:35 3-5, was probably the slowest the crack 'varsity miler has done for a long time. This was the famous light blue's last appearance on the track, as he will be ordained for the ministry on his return to England. Lutiens was the greatest miler ever turned out of the English 'varsities.

The Cambridge second string, Lewin, again proved superior to the choice, Fitzherbert, in the quarter-mile run, and was also too good for the Yale pacer, Richards and Wade, though if the former had timed his effort better he might have won. It was a very exciting race for the last hundred yards. Lewin led at the furlong with Richards second and Fitzherbert third. The latter's powerful stride was bringing him up to the leaders round the bend for home, but when it came to the finish spurt, the long English champion could not respond. Foot by foot Richards closed the gap between himself and Lewin, who was tiring fast, but struggle as he would, the son of Eli could not get even with the plucky Cantab, who won by barely two feet. This was the third and last event to the credit of the light blues.

In the high hurdles, English style, with fixed hurdles, on the turf, Hatch turned tables on Cady and won by six feet from Fletcher, the Cantab's second string, who was a yard in front of Cady. Pilkington touched his fifth hurdle and gave up the contest.

The high jump was a very mediocre performance on both sides. Johnson, the Cantab, was the first to go out with the bar at 5 feet 6 1-4 inches. Sheldon and Thomson, the Yale pair, and Jennings, the remaining Cantab, all failed at 5 feet 9 1-4 inches. After a lot of tedious trials the bar was lowered to 5 feet 8 1-4 inches and at this height Thompson scored another point for Yale. Both Sheldon and Jennings failed to go over and tied for second place on their best previous jumps of 5 feet 7 1-4 inches.

The broad jump also went to Yale.

The shot and hammer both went to Yale.

Summaries:

100-yard dash—Won by William Richards, Yale; R. W. Burnett, Yale, 2d; E. H. Lewin, Cambridge, 3d. Time, :10 1-5.

120-yard hurdle race (American style) Won by E. H. Cady, Yale; G. B. Hatch, Yale, 2d; L. E. Pilkington, Cambridge, 3d. Time, :16.

300-yards run—Won by William Richards, Yale; E. H. Lewin, Cambridge, 2d; W. Fitzherbert, Cambridge, 3d. Time, :32 2-5.

Half-mile run—Won by F. S. Horan, Cambridge; F. W. Crane, Yale, 2d. Time, 2:00 2-5. Each college only started one man. The race was a gift for the Cambridge president, who made the running from the start.

One-mile run—Won by W. E. Lutyens, Cambridge; J. B. Morgan, Yale, 2d; H. J. Davenport, 3d. Time, 4:35 3-5.

440-yards run Won by E. H. Lewin, Cambridge; W. N. Richards, Yale, 2d; W. Fitzherbert, 3d. Time, :49 4-5.

120-yards hurdle (English style), on the grass with fixed hurdles—Won by C. E. Hatch, Yale; William M. Fletcher, Cambridge, 2d; E. H. Cady, Yale, 3d. Time, :16.

Running high jump—Won by I. H. Thompson, jr., Yale, 5 feet, 8 1-4 inches; F. M. Jennings, Cambridge, and L. P. Sheldon, Yale, tied for second place at 5 feet, 7 1-4 inches. Johnson was first to go out at 5 feet, 6 1-4 inches. The others all failed at 5 feet, 9 1-4 inches, and after a lot of tedious trials, Thompson won the tie, clearing 5 feet, 8 1-4 inches. Jennings and Johnson tied for second, but did not jump off.

Running broad jump—Won by L. P. Sheldon, Yale, 21 feet, 4 1-2 inches; F. M. Jennings, Cambridge, 21 feet, 2d; R. Mitchell, Yale, 20 feet, 9 3-4 inches, 3d.

Putting 16-pound shot—Won by W. O. Hickok, Yale, 42 feet, 2 inches, A. Brown, Yale, 40 feet, 4 inches, 2d; E. J. Watson, Cambridge, 37 feet, 2 1-2 inches, 3d.

Throwing 16-pound hammer—Won by W. O. Hickok, Yale, 120 feet, 7 inches; H. P. Cross, Yale, 117 feet, 6 inches, 2d; A. B. Johnston, Cambridge, 107 feet, 8 inches, 3d.

REAFFIRMED.

The Report of a Decided Stand in the Venezuelan Affair.

New York, Oct. 5.—The Herald's Washington special says:

Secretary Olney and the other officials of the State Department still maintain a diplomatic silence on the subject of the Venezuelan question, but what little information which can be had all goes to confirm everything said in these dispatches.

There have been denials of the London dispatch that an ultimatum had been sent to Great Britain. It was distinctly stated that Mr. Olney had not demanded an answer within a specified time. Mr. Bayard was simply instructed to obtain a reply to the distinct and firm statement of the position of the administration if possible in time for the President to treat of the matter in his annual message to Congress.

The Venezuelan question bids fair to overshadow all others during the next month in Washington, and the correspondence that will take place will be of the greatest importance as affecting the relations between the United States and Great Britain. It will be peculiarly interesting for the reason that it will oppose largely each other two men who owe their present positions largely to their knowledge of the details of the controversy. It is well known that the selection of Sir Julian Pauncefote to represent Great Britain at Washington, the British government was largely influenced by the fact that he was thoroughly familiar with the Venezuelan boundary dispute which, it was foreseen even then, might at any moment become a question of great importance between the two countries. It was Sir Julian who, as under secretary of the foreign office in London, conducted most of the correspondence with the Venezuelan government on the boundary question, and it is understood that President Cleveland was largely led to transfer Mr. Olney from the Department of Justice to the State Department on account of the intimate knowledge which he had acquired of the same question when preparing his report upon it as Attorney General.

I had a conversation to-day with Representative Livingstone of Georgia, who introduced the resolution passed by the last Congress requesting the President to urge arbitration upon the governments of Venezuela and Great Britain. Mr. Livingstone said he did not expect any decided action to be taken by the administration before the meeting of Congress, but he believed one of the first things Congress would do would be to take a decided stand on the Venezuelan question

War Echoes.

Key West, Fla., Oct. 5.—Passengers by the Mascotte to-night report an uprising at Leguira, about 10 leagues from Havana.

The insurgents during the early part of the week captured the town of Santa Clara without resistance.

It is reported in Havana that the warship Infanta Isabel ran aground off Baya Honda while on her way to the Colorado reef to relieve the ship Cristobal Colon.

The ship Conde De Venadito's machinery is reported to be in bad condition.

Fifty thousand troops with two generals in command are expected to arrive at Havana during the coming week.

May Beat McKinley.

Columbus, O., Oct. 5.—Ex-Secretary Charles Foster, on his way to Senecaville to speak, was a caller at Republican headquarters to-day.

Concerning the Presidency, the ex-Secretary said: "If Quay, Platt and Clarkson agree on some man—Reed or Allison, or somebody else and secure the co-operation of Elkins, they may be able to defeat McKinley."

So far as could be learned, William R. Hearst of San Francisco had been unable to complete negotiations for the purchase of any New York paper. It is hardly a matter of doubt, however, but that he will gain control of The Morning Journal.

A STATE FUNERAL YESTERDAY.

The Obsequies Conducted With Much Pomp and Ceremony—Men Prominent in Many Ways were Present—Imposing Procession.

Paris, Oct. 5.—The funeral services over the body of Professor Louis Pasteur took place in the Cathedral of Notre Dame to-day.

About 9 o'clock this morning the first group of delegates arrived in the Rue Dutte in front of the Pasteur Institute, where the body has been lying in state, and thereafter was a steady stream of people coming to take part in the obsequies. At 10 o'clock the clergymen of the parish church said prayers over the coffin, which was then placed in the hearse. The Republican guard headed the procession and were followed by General Saussier, military Governor of Paris, and his staff, with a numerically strong military escort. Then came the delegates from the Alsatian societies, the various municipalities and trades followed by delegations of nurses, monks and students, all of them bearing imposing wreaths. Five floral cars were in the procession, all of them covered with wreaths. The band of the Republican guard played a dirge as the procession started for the cathedral.

The hearse, drawn by six horses, was followed by M. Pasteur's son, his son-in-law and his grandson. Then came the presidents of the Senate and Chamber of Deputies, Premier Ribot and M. Trarieux, Minister of Justice, followed by the leading foreign diplomats and an unending line of generals, admirals and lesser military and naval officers, a delegation of members of the French Academy, including M. Coppe, the celebrated literateur; M. Paul Bourget, the poet and novelist, and M. Leon Say, the famous economist, red-robed justices, physicians and representative members of every profession. The procession was about a mile long and its rear guard was composed with a troop of cavalry. The route near the Pasteur Institute was lined with silent crowds of men and women who made the sign of the cross as the body passed by.

As the hearse reached the Cathedral of Notre Dame, wreaths were placed in the square. The priests connected with the late M. Pasteur's parish, left the coffin at the church door and it was then taken in charge by the priests attached to the cathedral. Prince Lobanoff Rostovsky, Russian Minister of Foreign Affairs; Baron Mohrenheim, Russian Ambassador; United States Ambassador Eustis, and Lord Dufferin, British Ambassador, arrived in carriages. Mr. Newton Eustis, secretary of the United States embassy, and Commander Rogers, naval attache of the United States embassy, walked in the procession. At noon President Faure arrived and passed under the mourning drapery which concealed the facade of the church. The Grand Duke Constantine of Russia and Prince Nicholas of Greece, were already in the church. Abbe Narle celebrated the mass and the choir sang the liturgy. In the meantime the catafalque was hastily erected in the center of the square and a draped rostrum from which M. Poincare, Minister of Public Instruction, delivered a funeral oration, was also erected.

Archbishop Richard pronounced absolution after the mass.

President Faure walked out of the cathedral between Grand Duke Constantine and Prince Nicholas and listened to M. Poincare's eulogy of M. Pasteur, in which he reviewed the scientist's career and lauded his modesty, valor and charity. Dense masses of people filled the square. The troops defiled half an hour before the coffin and the body was then placed in the vault of the cathedral in the presence of the family.

APPEAL FOR CUBA.

Address Issued by the Chicago Committee.

Chicago, Oct. 5.—The following appeal to the people of the United States in behalf of Cuba has been issued by the committee selected for that purpose at last Monday's mass meeting:

The committee appointed by the Chicago mass meeting of Sept. 30, held to express sympathy with the Cubans, earnestly appeal to their fellow-citizens throughout the Union to call similar meetings not later than Oct. 21 and wherever practicable to be held on that night, in order that the movement may derive the benefit of such simultaneous action as adding to its impressiveness.

"Already announcements are made of meetings being projected in this behalf throughout the country, originating, generally with the citizens who suggest such calls to be made by the mayors of their respective localities, which is a convenient and appropriate method.

"Let a deaf ear be turned to the selfish argument that we are in no wise interested in the issue of present conflict between Spain and Cuba, and that the issue itself being involved in doubt we should abstain from any interference. The cause of liberty is involved, in which, as directly affecting our near island neighbor, all liberty-loving Americans should be interested, extending at least the moral aid of their sympathy and the encouragement to the struggling Cubans and leaving the consequences to the Supreme Ruler of nations."

Gen. Mahone Dying.

Washington, Oct. 5.—After a consultation at 11 o'clock the physicians in attendance upon Gen. Mahone expressed the opinion that he could live but a few hours, and would probably die before morning. He is sinking rapidly from exhaustion, and his pluse is almost imperceptible.

Ex-Priest Wagner Married.

St. Joe, Mo., Oct. 5. Justice of the Peace Fitten spoke the words to-night that bound Dominick Wagner, the deposed priest, and Maud Steidel together for life. They were married at the residence of the bride's mother, where Wagner was taken from the county jail, a number of friends witnessing the ceremony and the priest was taken back to jail. Mrs. Steidel, mother of the girl, consented reluctantly to the match and she was prostrated after the ex-priest and her daughter were married. She may not allow the girl to live with Wagner. All the property belonging to Wagner has been turned over to Alex Podevant, to be held for the girl. The grand jury has not returned an indictment against Wagner, but it is expected he will be indicted.

SHIPS SENT FOR.

The Consuls in China Telegraph for Gunboats.

Foo Chow, China, Oct. 5.—The consuls investigating the Kucheng massacre have telegraphed for warships. Two British warships have arrived.

Intense excitement prevails, as an attack on the consuls is feared.

CRIPPLE CREEK.

Latest News from the World's Greatest Gold Mining Camp.

Special to The Gazette.

Cripple Creek, Oct. 5—A new and big strike has been made in the properties of the Union company in the past few days. The strike was made in an old and abandoned shaft which was sunk by lessees to a depth of 50 feet in the long-ago. The vein was struck on the side line between the Orpha May No. 1 and the Pike's Peak and was drifted on for a distance of 200 feet. A few days ago it was decided to run a cross-cut in the face of the drift, and the result was that an 8-foot vein was encountered, six feet of which will run better than seven ounces to the ton. Fifty tons from it have already been shipped and new ore-bins, etc., are being erected on the old Porcupine shaft for handling the ore. These workings are about 50 feet south of the new strike and things are being arranged so that it can be worked through them. Efforts have been made to keep the strike a secret, but it learned on reliable authority that the six feet of ore runs not less than seven ounces to the ton. In the meanwhile, the company is shipping from the Pike's Peak and Orpha May. The superintendent has now completed all the dead work necessary for the present and from now on will be able to ship double the quantity of ore that has been sent out in the past few months. Generally speaking the Union company's properties are showing up in first class shape.

From the Geneva, belonging to the Consolidated company, some 50 tons of ore are being shipped daily, from shafts Nos. 1 and 2. To-day 80 tons of ore were sent out. The number of men now employed is 70, and 12 or 15 of them are engaged in a room west of the shaft at the second level. This room is now about 50 feet long, 20 feet wide and has been stoped to a heighth of about 30 feet. The amount of ore in sight is amazing, and without sorting it will run $30 to the ton. Some of the richer stuff will run three ounces to the ton, but the average is not above $35.

On the Doyle lease, on the north end of the Trail, a big body of ore has been opened up. It was discovered in a crosscut which was being run from one shaft to the other. The vein is 18 feet wide and was opened up at a depth of 90 feet below the surface, assuring the lessees of plenty of stoping ground. The vein carries an 18-inch streak on the foot wall that runs from four to five ounces to the ton, the rest of the vein assaying all the way from $14 to $10 per ton.

The lease on the Captain lode, belonging to the Portland company, expired on the first of the month. Last month the lessees shipped 15 tons of ore that returned close to 30 ounces to the ton, and they are now making a final clean up. The company will take charge shortly.

The station at the fifth level in the Independence has been completed and as soon as some room is made in the drifts sinking will be resumed again. At the sixth level the station will be a very large one, as it is intended to place pumps at this depth.

The Portland No. 2 is now flooded and connection will be made from there to the Independence and worked from that mine, which, being some 125 feet deeper, will drain it.

Electric Works Sold.

Kansas City, Oct. 5.—The Argentine Water and Electric Light works were sold at 1 o'clock this afternoon by special master, A. E. Wagner, at the front steps of the courthouse in Kansas City, Kan., under a decree of the United States Circuit Court, to satisfy a judgment in favor of the Farmers' Loan and Trust company of New York. The price paid for the property was $10,000. The indebtedness for which judgment was rendered was $150,000 and interest. The purchase was made by J. C. York, of Woodbury & Moulton, Portland, Me.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES.

Judge Cunningham R. Scott of the District Court at Omaha, was renominated by acclamation to-day by the Republican convention. He will probably be re-elected.

At Chicago, Harry J. L. Martin, the confessed bank embezzler, was arraigned before Justice Foote, and waiving examination, he was held to the grand jury in $5,000 bonds.

Alexander Stowell, a prominent and wealthy Boston jeweler, died at Pasadena, Cal., from Bright's disease. He was the leading member of the firm of Stowell Manufacturing company, but has resided in Pasadena for two years.

At Cincinnati, the old stock yards, between Mill creek and Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton railroad tracks, were almost completely destroyed by fire. The total loss will not exceed $30,000, partially insured. Origin unknown.

B. J. Bartlett of 909 South Twenty-second street, St. Louis, Mo., died suddenly at Gore's hotel, Chicago. Mr. Bartlett was 70 years of age, and a representative of Graham and Patten, a lumber firm, of Seattle, Wash.

At Guthrie, O. T., Willis and Harry Welsh, convicted of robbing an old man, were sentenced to life imprisonment. They are the first to be convicted under the law making train and highway robbery capital crimes.

At Atchison, Kan., the Foster-Hudson libel suit came to an abrupt close. Major Hudson acknowledged through his attorney that his publication in the Topeka Capitol was not intended to reflect on Judge Foster's integrity as a man or judge, etc., etc. Judge Foster has accepted the explanation, and the libel suit was dismissed by Judge Webb.

THE FLEETING SHOW.

Stories and Gossip Picked up on the Streets.

"I was up at the ball grounds the other day and I see that it has been rolled and is being put in shape for football. I would like to make some suggestions. First, why not put the grounds over on the east side of the track this time so that the grand stand can be used. An increase in the receipts could be made in this way. Second, if this is done take the old shell of a stand strengthen it. I would not like to see a big crowd get on it at present. Third, let the two school associations buy a quantity of rope and rope off the grounds. The crowd can be kept back of a barrier of this kind. It is not fair to take people's money and then have them unable to see what is going on because a crowd of men and boys surround the players. I know a great many people who are kept away from the games because they are so unsatisfactory in this way and the increased attendance will pay for the ropes. A custodian can be appointed to take care of the rope after each game and it will last for years."

A lady who rides a heavy wheel of the vintage of '92 came back from a ride to Manitou the other day quite indignant. On the way she met some small boys who had cried, "Tie, tie, ke." She at first thought she had been insulted and wanted to know what they meant. Perhaps the wheelmen can explain it.

You a lady of an aesthetic turn — how you jazzed peaks woo the clouds?" Young man who knows: "Shouldn't go a mooing with a jag."

Some days ago a lady of the city was [illegible] her little son on the sin of lying. She told him that for every lie he told his heart became blacker in the sight of God, who was a pure spirit. The next day she heard an outcry in the nursery and found her little daughter crying. When she inquired the cause, the little girl complained that her brother had talked mean to her. She asked the boy what it was and he told her that he had told his sister had a black heart. "Why did you say that?" "Well, she told a lie. She said that she knew more than I did."

I take a good deal of pleasure in looking up what was doing in this town 20 years ago. I find that 20 years ago this week there were a number of interesting happenings. The citizens subscribed $9,000 to the building of the Cottonwood and Lake County toll road, whatever that was. An effort was made to get the county bonded for $4,000 to build the [illegible] Rand railroad. W. H. Hack got an assay of $138 out of his mine, the [illegible] Tender, located in Cheyenne canon, and a column was devoted to telling about the mines out there. It sounds as if it might be just out of a late number of the daily. The same column informs us that Mr. W. S. Stratton of this city is getting rich out of his mine in the San Juan, a mine called the Yreteba. He didn't, though. Another column is devoted to a description of the new school building, a mighty fine affair too, built of stone. It burned up years ago. There is a description of a "centennial tea," with the names of the young ladies who represented the States. I would reproduce it if it was not that some of the young ladies might kick—because I recognize some of them as still figuring in the social doings. In the outside news items is one that sounds dreadfully familiar: Spain has just sent 15,000 soldiers to put down the rebellion in Cuba.

The poet fares badly at my hands but that never makes any difference to the poet. He is always abroad in the land. I have received a poem lately, however, that I really think the reader should have the benefit of, and the printers have instructions to "follow copy." It was actually handed in by a man signing himself a reverend and a D. D. You can bet your money that his name was printed in the middle something like this: Rev. E. Pounder Pulpit, D. D. The poem is addressed "To Pike's Peak," and the author, I know, meant that the inspiring thing should hold the same relation to Western scenery that Coleridge's hymn "Before Sunrise, in the Valley of Chamounix," does to the Alps. It runs thus, and it is really no "josh" that it was handed in with the expectation that it would be printed seriously:

Here you stand on your granite base
A centinal of the desert waste
Your place it seems by wise design
Has connected you with the Rocky line

Mid grandest scenes for miles around
May be seen your head with glory crowned

The spring may come and the summer stay
But still with snow you are always gay
Mid all the seans in east or west
The Garden of the Gods surpass the rest
But while pedestrians wheels role by
All eyes are fixed on your form so high.

To scale thy hight and share thy fame
Here men of wealth and science came
Till up thy side by canions deep
The iron horse doeth slowly creep

Round thy throne, the centinals stand
Like the giants of some fairy land
The wheels of Ages have come and gone
But the King of the Rockys still holds his own

On the western side towards the crimson shore
Nature has deposited the golden ore
And many a son from far and near
Has found a copious blesing here

On the eastern side towards the break of day
There are Cities that stretch for miles away
There copious streams from thy riven side
Role along the streets in a crinkle tide

Virginias healing waters in limped fountains flow
To Florridas sunny showrs the Northern people go
But Beautiful Manitou fair Godess of the west
For tiered limbs and throbing brains surpasses all the rest.

Bringing China to Terms.

It is Jingoism, of course, this action of Great Britain in China. It is worse than that; it is patriotism. It is worst of all. It is the giving of protection to fellow-citizens—or subjects in foreign parts. To cap the climax of iniquity, the persons thus protected are missionaries, and the sons of missionaries of all men the most odious to your true Jingo-hater. In addition, by way of filling up the chinks, this business is interference by one nation with the domestic affairs of another, and bullying of a big but weak power by a small but strong one, and lots of other things that are altogether detestable. We ought to disapprove it with a stern and quite superior air. We ought to denounce the bloodthirsty Englishmen who set out to save or to avenge their countrymen and to show how much better than they the Chinese are, who are thus rudely interrupted in their favorite diversion of killing "foreign devils."

We ought. But somehow or other the unregenerate Old Adam in us is too strong. Humiliating and disgraceful though it be, we must confess a certain thrill of exultation at that British ultimatum and its prompt effect. (New York Tribune.

LONDON CABLE LETTER.

Events of Current Importance in the British Metropolis.

(Special Cable Letter.)

London, Oct. 5.—Though the foreign office professes to be satisfied with the full and prompt acceptance by the Pekin government of the ultimatum forwarded to it by the British government demanding the degradation of Liu Ping Chang, viceroy of Sze-Chuen, for his connection with the Sze-Chuen riots, the trouble growing out of the overt hostility of the Chinese to British subjects is not over. The movements of the British squadron in the Yang-tse-Kiang show that the tension in the relations between Great Britain and China has hardly been lessened by the punishment of Liu Ping Chang.

Vice Admiral Buller, instead of ceasing to demonstrate the pressure that is being brought to bear on the Pekin government, keeps under orders the British warships at every point where they were stationed before the Tsung-Li-Yamen apparently conceded the British demands. The warship Aeolus has gone to Wu-Chang, where Vice Admiral Buller is charged to present to Chang Cheh Tung, the viceroy, the demands relative to the inquiry into the Ku-Cheng massacre. Chang Cheh Tung is a notorious hater of foreigners, and Wu-Chang is the center of the production of the pamphlets and placards inciting the populace to the murder of Europeans. No overt act of hostility that would justify Great Britain in demanding his dismissal from office can be traced to him, despite his known antipathy to foreigners. The exact nature of the demands that will be presented to him has not transpired. A strong feature of Vice Admiral Buller's admission is that he is directed to deliver the British dispatches directly to Chang Cheh Tung, instead of negotiating through Pekin. It is expected by the foreign office that the viceroy will concede the demands.

Prime Minister Salisbury has directed Sir Nicholas O'Connor, the British minister to China, to expedite his return to London. Sir Nicholas will go to St. Petersburg as ambassador in room of Sir F. C. Lascelles. He will be in London in November, when a new minister to China will be appointed.

It is evident that Great Britain is determined to conserve and expand her trade and other interests in China. In order to effect this end, important changes will be made in the duties of the members of the legation at Pekin. Besides the secretary of the legation, a special commercial attache will be obliged to make an annual tour of the treaty ports. The secretary will visit the chief consulate, the commercial attache will receive the British residents, learning their grievances and watching the course of trade. As Sir Nicholas O'Connor suggested these changes, nothing will be done in the matter until Lord Salisbury personally confers with Sir Nicholas.

It is rumored in diplomatic circles that Sir Julian Pauncefote, British Ambassador to the United States, will succeed Lord Dufferin as ambassador to France. Sir Julian's preference for Washington over some of the better paid European posts is not concealed, but if he should be offered the blue ribbon of the British diplomatic service, he would, it is said, be certain to accept it.

A clique of old-time Liberals, mostly members of the Reform club, are resenting the proposed transference of the control of the party to more democratic hands. The National Liberal club, backed by interested wire-pullers, is trying to squash the projected conference on party reorganization. The political committee of the National Liberal club is desirous of avoiding internal squabbles and is inclined to abandon the conference, but in the face of the demands of every Liberal and radical association in the country, it will be obliged to proceed. The conference will be held at the end of October. It will concern itself solely with plans for party reorganization.

Inquiries made in Mincing Lane to-day elicited the information that France is now practically out of the sugar market, exporting little or no sugar. This is due, it is said, to a "corner" in beet sugar. The absence of the French product has had a sympathetic action on the markets and has been a factor in raising the price to 11s per cwt, an advance of 1s 6d within a few weeks. A larger "corner" than that of the French syndicate was, it is supposed, recently attempted. A great insurance company of London was approached with a proposition that it insure in different parts of the world to the value of £1,000,000. This company canvassed other companies with a view to getting them to uncover part of the risk. Inquiries, however, rendered doubtful what quantities of sugar had been actually purchased and a question arose as to whether speculators meant to operate on this insurance. The proposal therefore fell through, but it caused much talk in the sugar market.

The agricultural papers are raising an outcry against the free admission into Great Britain of American sheep. A recent consignment of sheep from America was found to be suffering with scab, the spread of which disease in the United Kingdom is due, according to the Live Stock Journal, to the importation of sheep from the United States. Many of these sheep were dispersed over the country for grazing and they spread the disease. The paper says that the board of agriculture must therefore be asked to issue an edict, similar to that applied to cattle, providing that American and Canadian sheep should be killed at their port of landing.

Mrs. A. C. Davis, [illegible] visiting various English textile schools on behalf of the Fall River Technical Textile school, with a view to learning the latest methods adopted in the textile industry, says she was welcomed everywhere. She was especially pleased with the courtesy of Manager J. R. Reynolds of the Manchester Technical school. She was astonished to find that one-third of the day pupils were foreigners, who, after completing their studies return to their homes and compete with the people who provide them with their training at a nominal cost.

A doubtful rumor has gained currency that the Queen will make a visit to Ireland next summer. Though Her Majesty is enjoying fine health and is vigorous for her years, she has an increasing dislike for crowds or noise of any kind. During her railway journeys, all the stations at which she is obliged to stop are cleared of people as far as possible.

Lord Salisbury has sold the chalet Cecil, his property at Dieppe, France, to the Duc D'Aumale.

Countess Clancarty, better known as Belle Bilton, who was some years ago a decidedly well-known concert hall singer, proposes to return to the stage. She is negotiating with the manager of a Liverpool theater.

Ambassador and Mrs Bayard are the guests of the Hon Mrs. Ingram at Temple Newsam, Yorkshire.

With the growth of distrust in the Armenian propaganda, caused by the reports of responsible correspondents that the stories of the outrages at Sassoun and elsewhere were greatly exaggerated for political purposes, the pressure of strong party influence on the Salisbury government in favor of modifying the demands that have been made upon the Porte also increases. Since the fall of the Liberal Cabinet it has been an open secret that Lord Rosebery threatened the Porte that if the demands of the powers were not accepted in a specified time two of the chief Turkish ports, presumably Smyrna and Salonica, would be seized and the customs revenues sequestered. The dispatch of the Earl of Kimberly to this effect while he was Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, exists in the archives of the Foreign Office. Prime Minister Salisbury has from the outset continued the policy of his predecessor. The presence of a British fleet at Lemnos is explained as confirming the intention of the government to occupy Turkish ports if the Porte should prove defiant or should unduly delay the settlement of the question, but the appointment of Kiamil Pasha as Grand Vizier, with other indications that the Sultan desires to satisfy the powers, has checked British action. Representations have been sent to Lord Salisbury from many of his Conservative adherents, advising him to follow the traditional British policy of support of Turkey.

These representations are likely to induce Lord Salisbury to relax the stringency of his demands. At any rate, Kiamil Pasha will be given time to show his hand. During the six years that he was formerly Grand Vizier, that is, from September, 1885, to September, 1891, he guided the Porte through a series of disasters with the greatest skill. He entered office as the supposed friend of Russia, but he soon developed a tendency in favor of the triple alliance, especially Germany, filling the administrative posts whenever he could with Germans and granting concessions for public works to German capitalists. The English papers treat his recall to power as a triumph for England, ignoring the fact that Kiamil Pasha showed no special bias toward England and that he opposed the occupation of Egypt by Great Britain. They also find it convenient to forget that he refused to admit the British demand for the free passage of the Straits of the Dardanelles in the event of war with Russia. He has always proved himself to be keenly alive to the danger of British encroachment. The Sultan has called him to power now, not as being biased towards any power, but as relying upon his skill to guide the country through the existing and impending storms. The Armenian question is not the only one that he will have to deal with, there are other matters that will require the exercise of his political skill for their settlement.

A [illegible] of Arabia is in revolt, the [illegible] making preparations to enter upon a regular campaign in Macedonia, and the Island of Crete is on the verge of an insurrection. It will therefore be seen that it will require a master hand to guide affairs so that there shall be no dismemberment of the empire.

The leading financial papers here concur in the opinion that the late depression in the Kaffir mining market does not involve a panic. Doubtless, says The Statist, the speculators have taken too rapid and too large lately and the pace could not be kept up. In any event it must have led to a set-back, but the fall has been so small that it proves that the market is sound at the bottom and that the public retains its faith in its future. The present shake out will not only clear the market of weak operators, but it will afford capitalists the desired opportunity to take a greater interest in the market. The large purchases of sugar for American account proceeded in London and Greenock. At yesterday's close the market at Greenock showed an advance of 1s 6d on the week. Private advices support Giesecker's estimate of the deficit in the beet crop. In addition to the shortness of the beet crop, anxiety is caused by the crop in Cuba. Though it is reported to be large it is doubtful if it will be reaped, owing to the disturbances in the island.

American refiners will therefore be obliged to increase their purchases in Europe.

Literary Note.

"Ad Absurdum"—the leading essay in The Critic of Sept. 28 is a study of "Cara Braccio," "Daisy Miller," "A Human Document" and "The Woman Who Did," the writer's purpose being to show that Mr. Crawford, Mr. James, Mr. Mallock, and Mr. Allen, have aimed in these stories to show how absurd were the positions they seemingly sought to defend. A portrait of Mr. du Maurier by himself is reproduced, in which the creator of "Trilby" is depicted as part man, part angel and part demon, with a few modest and deprecatory words as to his real character. There is also a portrait of Miss Agnes Repplier, and a reproduction of the Brewster tablet recently unveiled at Scraby, England.

AS KATE FIELD SEES US.

That celebrated author and newspaper woman, Kate Field, was here not long ago, and since she went away, she has been writing a very interesting series of articles on this city and Cripple Creek for the Colorado Times-Herald. She begins as follows:

"People make places. This town is proof positive. First, a man of brains decides that at the foot of Pike's Peak, famous in western history, there shall be a sanitarium so beautiful in situation, so admirable in climate for [illegible] and [illegible], as well regulated by law, as to draw invalids from all parts of the union. Next, this sanitarium is called Colorado Springs. There is not a spring within five miles of it, but west of that fine iron and soda springs sparkle at Manitou, and now that the trolley whizzes between the two resorts distance is eliminated. Juliet didn't know what she was talking about when she romantically asked: 'What's in a name?' There's a deal in a name. Had General Palmer sat on the oracle's stool he could not have divined a better than he gave his bantling. It tells the whole story geographically and medically."

Here at least is one traveler who is satisfied with the name of Colorado Springs. Let us be thankful.

Miss Field was here long ago, in the very earliest days; and she is more astonished at the growth of the place than people who have never been here before. She says:

"As for Colorado Springs, I am amazed at the transformation. Little did General Palmer dream when he laid out the town as a sanitarium that twenty-one years later the discovery of probably the greatest gold camp in the world would be made on the southwestern slopes of Pike's Peak, only eighteen miles distant on an air line. Such is fact, and Colorado Springs to-day seems to be saying to itself, 'Did you ever know anything like it? Consumptives and miners are the last people to mingle, yet behold the work of fate. I am next door to a mining camp and I'm prospering as never before. Though the demoralization of silver nearly ruined Denver, the blow did not affect my population, for Cripple Creek gold rolled down the mountain into our laps and we've been living in clover ever since.' Sit down to a hotel table and for one pale face with a hacking cough there are half a dozen stalwart men going or coming from Cripple Creek. Their talk is mines. Walk abroad and, when two or three heads are together, you will overhear fragments of conversation about 'leads,' 'big strike,' 'output,' and 'dividends.' Look into the shop windows and you'll see notices of stocks and bonds. The atmosphere is charged with gold and I'm glad of it. Not only will the great camp pull Colorado out of the dumps, but in addition to enriching the State and the nation, it gives invalids something to think about besides themselves."

Of course she encountered the Chamber of Commerce, and from all appearances, the smile had its usual result. Look at this:

"George Rex Buckman, guardian angel of the Springs, states in his excellent work on this region that three-fourths of Colorado's entire population is made up of people sent here for their health. As Mr. Buckman is one of these 200,000 health-seekers, having come here a wreck seventeen years ago and now being a walking advertisement for the climate, he undoubtedly tells the truth. What a blessing to a wonderfully intelligent population that they can, as it were, have their cake and eat it too! While obeying their doctors' orders they enjoy the fun of watching the most fascinating gambling on earth, mining, and can take a hand in the deal when they like. According to Montesquieu: 'The empire of climate is the most powerful of all empires.' Combine climate with gold and what can resist the union? I'm on the verge of the gold fever myself, and expect to have a severe attack when I reach the altitude of Cripple Creek."

From here Miss Field went up to Cripple Creek, where she had some interesting experiences. We have space for only a little of what she says of the great gold camp:

"The croakings of old miners are probably the reason why Cripple Creek is called 'the poor man's camp.' Capital listened to the arguments of acknowledged authorities and was deaf to the voice of the siren. Poor men of Colorado Springs rushed in where some feared to tread. They had little or no money to invest, yet their prospects very many paid their way from the beginning. Among those men whose fortunes may now be reckoned from $[illegible] to $[illegible] were painters, farmers, plumbers, ticket brokers, druggists, grocers, one schoolmaster and one carpenter. Three years ago few of them had a bank account.

"The first year's yield at Cripple Creek was $[illegible]; $[illegible] was the output of [illegible]. Despite the panic of 1893, and no railroad within twenty miles, for that year Director Preston, of the United States mint, records a yield of $[illegible]. Then came the ill-advised labor strike that shut down the mines for six months. Though operations were not generally resumed until last November's elections assured the defeat of that political freak, D. H. Waite, the output of 1894 very nearly reached $3,000,000. Those who are best informed declare that $[illegible] will be put to the camp's credit at the end of this year. The yield of last July amounted to $[illegible]. At this rate of increase, and with a gold bearing tract thirty square miles in area, six miles long and five miles wide, who shall say what may happen, with veins that go beyond the porphyry? How far do they extend into the surrounding granite? How many hopes may be crushed in trying to find out?

"There are experts and experts, and we turn to the scientists of the United States geological survey for light; but as the lamented Professor Dana used to say that a treatise on geology was out of date a month after publication, and as Professor S. F. Emmons, who is now investigating Colorado mines, has just assured that nothing is impossible in geology, science offers little help."

Kate seems to have caught the right spirit, and her articles will do a great deal of good for this city and for Cripple Creek.

THE RETORT OAK

While you are looking around for a heating stove, come in and see The Retort Oak stove, the only self-feeding stove that is a success. It will burn any kind of coal, even coal dust, and slack will work all right.

It is absolutely clean, will not smoke. In fact, there are no bad features about it. Will hold fire from 24 to 48 hours. Come in and get a book of explanations. We also have almost all kinds of heating stoves, both new and second-hand. Coal Hods, Zincs, Shovels, etc.

Remember that we are selling furniture for less money than any other dealer in the city.

110 South Tejon. JOHN T. CLOUGH.

A Real Estate Bargain.

We offer a fine corner, 150x190 feet, facing south and west on North Nevada avenue, for $1,500. It is a splendid site for a large residence, or can be subdivided and six houses built upon it. It is strictly in the line of the big growth of the town, and is a bargain.

We offer for rent, the fine residence on the northwest corner of North Weber and San Rafael. The house is thoroughly modern, and the grounds are as fine as any in the city. Will give long lease at $100 per month, or rent through the winter only at $80.

Money to loan. Insurance written. Dealers in mining stocks.

THE COMBINATION TICKET.

The three conventions of Democrats, Populists and bolting Republicans got together finally last evening, and named a ticket in which the bolters get the sheriff, the Democrats the county clerk, and the Populists the rest. This seems a little hard on the Democrats, considering that there are several times as many of them as of the bolting Republicans, and the latter really get two offices to the Democrats' one, since Judge McMorris has already been indorsed by the combination; but if they like the situation, we have no right to object. It puts them in the position, however, of abandoning all principle, giving up their separate organization, and keeping in line with the Populists for next year.

Considering the elements that nominated it, it is not as bad a ticket as might fairly have been expected. Nearly all the men on it, so far as we know, are men of respectable personal character; but as to their fitness for office, not so much can be said.

Judge McMorris is well known here. He was District judge once, some years ago, as a Republican; and since he went out of office, he has been an applicant for about every legal or judicial position in the gift of the Republican party, from city attorney to district judge. He now holds one office which is a Republican gift—that of public trustee. Last year, he tried for the nomination which was given to Judge Harris. This year, he found that he could not be nominated by the Republican convention, so he announced himself as an independent candidate with the idea of getting the indorsement which he has now secured from the Populists and Democrats. If his health were good, and he should by any chance be elected, he might make a fairly good judge; and it is to be said for him that he is probably the strongest nomination the Populists could have made; for good lawyers are not plenty in their party. In ability and fitness for the office, Judge Lunt is far superior.

The candidate for county judge, Mr. J. Knox Burton of Cripple Creek, has been a justice of the peace in Cripple Creek for a year or two, but so far as we can learn, that is the extent of his practice at the county bar. Except for the fact that he is not a lawyer, his is a creditable nomination. Of course any comparison between him and Judge Severy, in the matter of fitness for the difficult and responsible post of county judge, is entirely out of the question.

For sheriff, the combination has nominated a bolting Republican, Mr. George Vaux of this city. Mr. Vaux keeps a livery stable on Cucharas street, and keeps it well, and that is to his credit. In fact, he is too good a man to be on a Populist ticket. What qualifications he may have for the office of sheriff we do not know. The reason he was nominated was because he was supposed to be able to draw some Republican votes away from Mr Boynton.

The candidate for assessor is Mr. A. Armentrout of this city, who keeps a clothing store, and is a quiet, respectable citizen.

The Democrats get the nominee for county clerk, Mr. J. H. Thedinga, who might be characterized as the New York Sun once characterized Gen. Hancock. "A good man, and weighs 250 pounds."

For treasurer the candidate is Mr. Frank T. Caley, said to be a resident of Victor, but reported to have his real residence at Littleton, in Arapahoe county. Mr. Caley is one of the fortunate owners of the Black Diamond, and was doubtless put on the ticket to supply the sinews of war.

Miss Lyle Harris of Manitou, the nominee for county superintendent of schools, has lived in Manitou for a dozen years or so, and has had no connection with educational work.

The nominee for county coroner is "Cal" Husted of Colorado City. He is a typical specimen of the Old-town Populist.

About the best nomination on the ticket is J. F. Smith of Cripple Creek, for surveyor. He is a real surveyor, and understands his business.

The ticket is completed by the nomination of Dr. Logan of Falcon for coroner. We don't know of anybody who knows who he is.

On the whole the ticket is fairly representative of the parties that named it. We should not like to say anything worse than this on a Sunday.

THAT STORY ABOUT CLEVELAND AND THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

At first we inclined to think that the dispatch from Washington about the adoption of the Monroe doctrine by the administration was a freak of the imagination of the active correspondent of the New York Herald, and gave no credit to it whatever. On thinking it over, we suppose that it may be intended by the administration as a "feeler," if it comes from the administration at all. On the whole, however, it scarcely seems possible that so complete a reversal of the policy of the administration is likely at this late day.

It is true that ex-Secretary Whitney is supposed to have been giving lately some elementary lessons in Americanism and party policy to the prophet of Buzzard's Bay; and among them may well have been an exhortation that unless some change in foreign policy was made within a short time, the Democrats would not have a leg left to stand on in the campaign of next year; but even supposing this to be possible, we still doubt whether Mr. Cleveland would be willing to confess, as such a step would confess, that his whole foreign policy has been wrong throughout his term, and that there is a necessity now of appealing to the jingo spirit of the American people to avert certain defeat.

Such a notice to Great Britain as was outlined in the dispatch of yesterday is one that might well have come from James G. Blaine or Benjamin Harrison, but it is so entirely opposite to the tone of all Mr Cleveland's policy that we do not expect anything of the kind while he is President. If he does issue such a notice, we shall be glad to commend him for waking up at last to his opportunities, and for giving some sign that he understands the duty of an American President.

The American Historical Register (the organ of the Patriotic-Hereditary societies), for October, has an attractive table of contents. The historic tour of Lafayette through the United States in 1824 is continued. This number deals, with scores of appropriate illustrations, of his trip up the Hudson, and visits to West Point, Newburg, Albany, Troy, etc. Major J. G. Rosengarten gives much that is new about General Comte de Rochambeau, illustrating his entertaining article with numerous portraits. Mrs. Jenkins[illegible] art[illegible] of Traditions of Fort Jenkins and the Pennamite War. In the "Some Colonial Families" department, is given the descendants of John Fenwick, once proprietor of [illegible] in New Jersey. Some of the Monthly Returns of the Adjutant of the First regiment Pennsylvania [illegible], 1782 are printed for the first time and show much information that is curious. An interesting sketch of General Anson, a poem by H. H. Harrison, and many pages of news of the Patriotic societies make up this very readable number, the frontispiece of which is the insignia of the Society of the Cincinnati, done in proper colors and embossed.

On our literary page to-day will be found the first part of the very able essay on current fiction which was read by Mrs. C. C. Richardson of Pueblo before the meeting of the State Federation of Women's Clubs. It was impossible to print the whole of it in this issue of The Gazette, and the second part will be printed next Sunday. We take pleasure in presenting to our readers this brilliant, if somewhat caustic review of all the leading authors of fiction in our day. We do not agree with all the estimates of Mrs. Richardson but that makes no difference in the interest and timeliness of her paper.

We have received several volumes for review, which we shall notice next week in our literary department. One of them, a history of Congress by Mr. Moore, published by the Harpers, is really a short history of the United States, and it is full of the most entertaining matter.

We would call special attention to the news about Cripple Creek and London on another page of this paper. Investors on the other side of the ocean are fast finding out about our great gold camp, and within a few months, the chances are that a great deal of "British gold" may be deposited there in the hope of bringing out a good return.

From the amount of "kicking" that has been done around the streets some people may have got the idea that there is danger of a considerable defection of Republicans from the ticket. The fact is that just three men from this city attended the bolters' convention yesterday. If they could not get up a larger attendance than that, the disaffection doesn't amount to much.

We beg the pardon of our Prohibition friends for not mentioning their county ticket before in this column. We did not find out till yesterday that they had nominated one. Their nominees are all nice, respectable persons, and have no chance of election.

Only two weeks are left for registration. More than 3,000 names were stricken off the roll of voters after the last spring election, because of failure to cast their ballots. Nearly all of these are still residents, and should re-register.

That George Rex Buckman and the sun returned at the same time was more than a coincidence. To put it mildly, the patron saint of Colorado Springs is "onto his job."

The Century, The Review of Reviews, and The North American are all in, and every one of them is up to its usual standard of excellence.

The Republican ticket is made of men especially fit for the office; the "combine" ticket was made to distribute the spoils.

Compare the two tickets, man for man, and see which is likely to give the county the best administration.

A ticket named by Sam Yarnell and John Calderwood will hardly get many votes in this city.

Lunt or McMorris; Severy or Burton; which would be the better judge?

It will turn out to be a three-ring show, all under one tent.

The "combine" ticket is not a vote-getter.

The New Choral Society.

To the Editor of The Gazette:

Will you permit me to say a few words through your columns on behalf of the new Choral society, that is to have its first meeting at the High School Auditorium to-morrow evening?

With the Festival Chorus of the Summer School as a nucleus, the College and High School choruses as valuable additions and with the assistance of all the leading musicians in town, it has been the desire of the board of directors to establish a permanent organization that shall extend its branches into every stratum of Colorado Springs life.

A fair voice is all that is necessary for eligibility to active membership, while the annual dues are so slight that their payment is within reach of every one.

The concerts the society hopes to give must prove a welcome addition to the season's series of entertainments, while proving a decided factor in the intellectual and artistic life of the town.

The board of directors, therefore, feel justified in hoping for an enthusiastic response on the part of the citizens in seconding their efforts for the establishment and promulgation of good music.

RUBIN GOLDMARK,
Musical Director of the Choral Society of Colorado Springs.

A Brooklyn Ticket.

Brooklyn, Oct. 5.—The following ticket has been agreed upon by the regular Democrats:

For mayor, E. M. Grout, for civil justices, Jacob New, William Lynch and Peter P. Huberty.

Mr. Grout was formerly the law partner of the Supreme Court justice, William G. Gaynor, and made the memorable trip to Gravesend on election day morning, in 1893, which resulted in the overthrow of John Y. McKane. Until recently he has been identified with the Shepardites.

DEMOPOPULICAN.

a longer notice would have been given, but until that morning he had not realized how the people of this county were being robbed by ring rule. (Applause.) He was in favor of good government and fusion. He had winced under the party lash long enough. He was not an office-seeker, but if the people wanted him, he would not be found wanting.

The motion to appoint a secretary was ruled out of order, as no one present knew how to write.

The name of "Citizens" ticket was adopted. "The people are tired of the 'ring,'" said Hon. Diggs. "They'll vote for anything that says 'Citizens,' without looking at the names."

The committee on credentials reported "the attendance of seven delegates present," besides one yellow dog that used to belong to Bob Mullen and had lost its job for general worthlessness. A motion was made to drive the dog away, but was ruled out of order by the chairman on the ground that the new party could not afford to be too particular at this time.

Upon motion the seven persons present were appointed as a committee to confer with the other conventions regarding nominations, each delegate to be entitled to two votes in the joint committee.

The convention then adjourned until such time as the committee was ready to report.

Immediately afterwards the committee met in caucus to consider nominations, and to agree as to how much the Citizens were entitled to in the way of offices. Hon. Scullery Diggs was in favor of presenting only one candidate, for sheriff. He did not intend to dictate, and opposed boss rule, but as the leader of the new movement he thought he himself was entitled to some consideration. Abraham Pantz of Anaconda said he was neither a Catholic nor an A. P. A., and appeared as a compromise candidate for assessor. Hon. Diggs remarked that Mr. Pantz had not been naturalized, and would do well not to appear too prominently in the new movement.

A seedy looking individual whose name was given as Swipes, announced himself as an applicant for the position of county treasurer. He had not been able to make much of a canvas, as on the evening before circus day he had been called out of town on important business and had only just returned, but his heart was in the cause. Hon. Diggs informed his associates that the gentleman had through a mistake been locked up in the city jail. If he were sheriff such a thing should not be allowed in El Paso county.

Gus Vjalle wanted to be superintendent of schools. In reply to a question he said that he did not know how to read, but he was not too old to learn. He was opposed to the establishment of an office-holding aristocracy, and believed in equal rights and equal privileges to all.

At this juncture a passer-by informed Hon. Diggs that the joint committees of the other parties had met and agreed upon a slate. The claims of the Citizens had not been considered. The announcement of this fact drew a howl of disappointment from the members of the new party. "I move," said Mr. Pantz, "that a committee of one be appointed to interview the central committees of the two parties now having candidates in the field, with a view of making the best arrangements for the co-operation of the Citizens. I would remind the chair that it is customary to appoint the mover of a motion on such a committee." Instead, a resolution was adopted pledging the members of the party to individual efforts in the cause of reform and indorsing Judge McMorris for the United States Supreme Court the convention adjourned.

"We are still in the ring," said Hon. Scullery Diggs, "and two years from now we shall be better organized and must be expected. I make no threats, but if to-day's ticket is beaten, we shall know the reason!"

DOCTORS VISIT.

Sunshine for the American Public Health Association

Notwithstanding the presence in the city of so many members of the American Public Health association, the clouds lifted yesterday morning and the visitors had a delightful day. A good many of them had gone over to Manitou Friday evening, and early this morning they went up the Peak. Some of them were enthusiastic about the view when they came down, others had nothing to say except that they had felt very queer, and didn't want to go again. The most enthusiastic was Dr. Horlbeck of Charleston S. C., who said that the view from the Peak was more than worth the journey from his home to see. He declared that it was the finest thing in America, and that he knew lots of people who had seen the Alps, and all that Europe could show, who said that this view was finer than anything in Europe.

At 12 o'clock those who had gone to the Peak took a special car of the Rapid Transit road for the Broadmoor Casino and those who went to the Peak came out on the next car. Here a delightful luncheon had been spread for the visitors, and Casser's Antlers orchestra discoursed sweet music while they were there. All enjoyed the view from the Casino, and on the way there, and all expressed themselves as delighted with all they had seen of Colorado Springs, and those who had to go away last evening were sorry.

The party came in from the Broadmoor at 3 o'clock, and most of them went on a ride through the Garden of the Gods. Afterward, some were entertained at Dr. Bell's residence at Manitou. Among those who were at the luncheon at Broadmoor were: Dr. C. O. Probst, secretary of the Ohio State Board of Health; Dr. J. C. Shrader, dean of the faculty of Iowa State University, and a member of the State Board of Health; Dr. Irving A. Watson of New Hampshire, secretary of the national association; Dr. Granville P. Conn, surgeon of the B. & M. railway; Dr. James Madison Watson of Elizabeth, N. J.; Dr. H. E. Bradley, health commissioner of Milwaukee; Dr. Bracken, of Minneapolis, Dr. J. L. Leal of Paterson, N. J.; Dr. Liston H. Montgomery, wife and son, and Miss Hulda Olsen of Chicago; Dr. U. O. B. Wingate, secretary of the Wisconsin State Board of Health, and wife of Milwaukee; Dr. Felix Formento of New Orleans, ex-president of the national association, and one of the authors of the quarantine system at New Orleans, which has kept the yellow fever out of that city for the last 15 years; Dr. E. Liceaga of Mexico City, president of the association; Dr. S. P. Wise, president of the Ohio State Board of Health; Dr. S. P. Durgin, ex-president of the association, and son, of Boston; Dr. Henry L. Mitchell, secretary of the New Jersey State Board of Health; Mrs. and Miss Mitchell, and Miss Stelker; Dr. William Bailey of Louisville, retiring president of the association, Dr. G. T. Swartz of Providence, R. I., secretary of the State Board of Health and wife; Dr. J. Montgomery and wife of North Dakota, Dr. C. C. Hunt and wife of Dixon, Ill., Dr. E. P. Cook of Mendota, ex-president of the Illinois State Board of Health, Mr. W. R. C. Colquhoun, health officer of Wilmington, Del., and Mrs. Colquhoun; Dr. A. B. Briggs, of the Rhode Island Board of Health, and Mrs. Briggs, Dr. H. B. Holbrook, health officer of Charleston, S. C.; Dr. James Patterson president of the Board of Health of Manitoba, Winnipeg, Dr. Cressy L. Wilbur of the Michigan State Board of Health; Dr. Henry Sewell and wife of Denver, Dr. H. M. Avery of Minneapolis, Mr. Crosby Gray of the Pittsburg Board of Health, Dr. Frank W. Wright of the Connecticut State Board of Health, Dr. Ernest Wende of Buffalo, N. Y.; Dr. R. C. Goodwin and daughter of Thomaston, Conn., Dr. Newton L. Bates, U. S. N., of Washington, D. C.; Dr. A. W. Cantwell of the Iowa State Board of Health, and wife, Dr. William C. Wey and daughter, and Miss Tompkins of Elmira, N. Y.; Dr. Edward Jackson of Philadelphia, and Dr. S. W. Ewing and wife of Montreal.

A Night of Comedy.

William Hoey's own comedy company, headed by "Old Hoss" himself, will present a new play by Louis De Lange entitled "The Globe Trotter," at the Opera House next Saturday evening. This play gives ample scope for his peculiar humor. He takes advantage of the opportunity and is exceedingly funny. In the first act he is seen in his original tramp character, "Old Hoss." Again in the second act as a deaf and dumb old woman. [illegible] Hoey is said to be exceedingly [illegible] and to be equally at home in [illegible] as an English lord in the third act. Hoey has surrounded himself with an excellent company, among the members are [illegible] Dryden, [illegible] Kennedy, [illegible] Stoddard, Frederick Ross, [illegible] Haverly, R. D. Allen, Mrs. [illegible] Pomeroy (Louise Thorndyke), George Edwards, Ada Alexandra. The story in brief is as follows: Miss Myra Brimstone, a young heiress, and Robert Hedley are in love, but there is an obstacle to their [illegible] the determination of Myra's guardian, Herbertle Brimstone, to marry her to [illegible] in the person of Henry Ashburgh, Lord Carlingford. This is the condition of affairs when the curtain goes up on the first act. The young people are overheard by "Old Hoss," a tramp—played by Mr. Hoey—and A. Chevet Steele, better known as Paul Clifford, a globe trotter from Boston. Both appear upon the scene at the proper moment, the latter assisting to help the lovers out of their predicament for a certain sum of money.

H. M. Jones, an old resident of Manitou, is now confined at the county jail on account of insanity. He has had a great deal of family trouble of late and took to drink. Yesterday he tried to throw himself under the wheels of a railroad train, but was so drunk that he missed the track. Later he talked of drowning himself and it was thought best to confine him.

The second division of the District Court has been adjourned until Oct. 22. Judge Lunt and Mr. Blackmer will spend the next two weeks in the counties of the district further east, holding court.

EPISCOPALIANS.

Yesterday's Proceedings in the National Convention.

Minneapolis, Oct. 5.—For a short 60 minutes to-day there was a brilliant forensic display between those members of the lower house of the Episcopal convention who are opposed to the relinquishment of any of its prerogatives and the element that holds that the fathers of the church are entitled to a little more leeway and latitude than was given them a century ago. It was the same story of the first clause of the first paragraph of the new constitution in which a large number of delegates are fighting to retain the stipulation in the old constitution preventing the bishops from pigeonholing legislation coming up from below. It was a threshing of old straw, however, for amendment after amendment was presented, until the venerable Judge Wilder of this State capped the climax by submitting a resolution to the following audacious effect:

"That so long as the house of bishops shall hold its legislative sessions with closed doors, the house of bishops shall signify to the house of deputies their approbation or disapprobation, the latter with objections in writing in three days after the proposed act shall be reported to them for concurrence."

This was the position [illegible] when the committee rose. The first section in question has been under debate for an entire day and two parts of days and seems to be no nearer a final vote than when it was originally presented on last Wednesday. To still further complicate matters, the house of bishops have [illegible] upon a revision of [illegible] and canons of its own [illegible].

The result will be that [illegible] revised revision sent up to the house from the deputies, another revision from the bishops. Just where the [illegible] will find the two houses [illegible] bishops nor deputies seem to know.

There are [illegible] that neither house can get through the volume in the two weeks of life that remain to the convention and there seems to be no other alternative than, after the wasting of much valuable time, the postponement of the issue until the convention of '98. This will probably be held in Louisville.

When the house of deputies commenced its work this morning, Dr. Morgan Dix, as chairman, announced the appointment of Revs. Dr. Stone of Chicago, Prewster of Long Island, Lawrence of Massachusetts, Judge Fairbanks of Florida, a committee to fill vacancies on church unity. Then Rev. Dr. Glazebrook of New Jersey renewed the resolution defeated last night, that the house suspend its business for the day in order to attend the mass meeting at the Lyceum theater. For this meeting, ex-Secretary of State Foster had come from Washington by invitation. It is understood, of some of the bishops, and the arrangements for the gathering had been made by a joint local and convention committee. Rev. Dr. Nichols of Minnesota said that there had been no understanding that the house would adjourn, and when a division had been challenged, so large a majority voted against adjournment that the "ayes" were not counted. Some of the leading delegates afterwards explained to the representatives of the United Press that no slight to the ex-Secretary was intended, but so much business was on hand that every hour was valuable.

The committee on new dioceses then reported in favor of the division of the dioceses of California, Maryland and Kentucky and the creation of new sees, and the report was adopted.

Dr. Ward of Kentucky made a plea for the holding of the next convention at Louisville, and it was referred to the appropriate committee. At this point the committee, in response to an urgent appeal from the general secretary of the board of missions, sent by a deputation from the Lyceum, rose, by a vote of 157 to 117, and the house adjourned.

As the deputies were dispersing, a resolution of greeting from the Methodist conference now in session and endorsing fraternity and good will between denominations in the interest of Christian unity was read by Dr. Dix.

There was no afternoon session of either house.

Frederick Lautzinger, one of the old residents of Council Bluffs, Ia., was found dead in bed, having committed suicide by taking a dose of carbolic acid.

Something New.

Messrs A. A. Mueth & Co. will open about Oct. 10, an elegant confectionery catering and ice cream establishment at 126 North Tejon. The members of the above firm have been until lately, with the well-known house of O. P. Bauer & Co., of Denver, and come here fully equipped and experienced in handling first class trade. They will be prepared to furnish appropriate and elegant refreshments for weddings, balls, receptions and parties, and desire to call especial attention to their fancy ice cream department, which, in variety and excellence of goods cannot be surpassed. The public are especially invited to call at their store on the opening night, Oct. 10, where they will find something which will surely please them.

Violin playing has become very fashionable among the girls in the East. It is said that the percentage of violin students in New York, Brooklyn, Boston, etc., now exceeds that of pianists. Many amateur orchestras have been formed, one of the most noted, exclusively composed of ladies, is the Mrs. Curtis's orchestra in New York, under the leadership of Theodore John. This fact is a good sign, that the taste in music has greatly improved in our country of late, when we remember that a few years ago, the banjo, that dreadful negro instrument, was the favorite instrument of our music-loving people.

THE MINING EXCHANGE

Colorado Springs, Oct. [illegible]—The call this morning was a lengthy one and a good deal of business was done. This was especially marked in the listed stocks in which the bulk of the trading was done and in which several stocks took an upward turn. In this particular Portland and Mt. Rosa were especially prominent. The first named stock had a total of over 5000 sales [illegible] Mt. Rosa was [illegible] with 3000 sales and jumped from [illegible] with the [illegible] price at the close, as was the case with Portland. [illegible] camp is [illegible] sudden jump which was quite a startling one, showing an average of two [illegible] over the previous day. Argentum Juniata was one of the [illegible] was in [illegible] prices. [illegible] closing [illegible] higher than any earlier price, giving the market a more favorable appearance. [illegible] The total sales of the listed stocks for the call amounted to [illegible] shares.

It has been [illegible] that the [illegible] properties are [illegible] it was thought [illegible] the properties [illegible] and to avoid [illegible] future.

This consolidation [illegible] the new company the [illegible] blowout or chimney of [illegible] which is thought to be [illegible] in the camp. [illegible] by the best known [illegible] of the district, and will at [illegible] take front rank among the largest [illegible] companies of the Cripple Creek district.

Mt. Rosa Notes.

Mt. Rosa stock made a nice jump in price yesterday and after selling at [illegible] closed in very good demand with [illegible] bid.

The cause of the rise is the good news just received from camp and which refers to the Adams lode as well as to the work which the company is doing.

The news from the Adams, which is being worked under bond and lease, is brief but good. It is to the effect that a body of 37-ounce ore has just been encountered in the bottom of the new [illegible] foot shaft on that property. This is some 66 feet west of the Jolly Tar and it is probable that it is an extension of the Strong vein.

On the company's ground, near the railroad track, the shaft is now down 191 feet and is timbered to within ten feet of the bottom. In the bottom is disclosed a vein three feet wide. Six inches of this lying against the west wall is a hard streak of quartzy matter and the remaining 2½ feet consists of what is termed a phonolite talc. The showing is said to be very good but no returns had yet been received from the assayer who is testing the rock.

THE MARKETS.

New York, Oct. 5.—Money on call 1½@2 per cent. Prime mercantile paper 4½@5½ per cent. Sterling exchange is steady with actual business in bankers' bills $4.89¾@4.87 for 60 days and $4.87½@4.87¼ for demand. Posted rates $4.87½@4.88. Commercial bills $4.85¾@4.86½.

Stocks opened irregular and in the main weak. The expectations of heavy liquidations by London because of the scare in Kaffirs were not realized, however, and soon after the opening the market improved ¼ to 1 per cent. The improvement was due to purchases by the shorts and not to any material change in the situation. When the demand from this source abated the market became irregular again and a number of prominent issues scored declines. The particularly weak stocks were Tobacco, the grangers, Sugar, the international issues and the anthracites. Tobacco fell 1⅞ to 97½. Sugar, 1 to 105¾, and the other stocks named anywhere from ½ to 1¼ per cent. Chicago Gas was feverish, ranging between 70¾ and 71¼. It was announced that the re-organization plan will state that dividends will be resumed on the stock on Jan. 1 next, at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum. An important piece of news was the announcement of the appointment of a receiver for the Oregon Improvement company. The receiver is the present general manager of the Improvement company. The appointment was made on the application of the former president, W. H. Starbuck, and was due to the failure of the company to meet its October interest. The stock was not influenced by this new development but the bonds lost 1½ per cent., selling down to 37. International stocks, such as St. Paul and Louisville and Nashville, were easier and London houses were again sellers. Much interest is manifested in the outcome of the settlements in London, which begin Oct. 12, because of the slump in Kaffirs, and local operators are disposed to keep close to the shore. The weekly bank statement showed a further loss in the reserve, say about six millions, which makes the reduction in the surplus since Oct. 31 last, $22,678,400. The amount held by the banks in excess of legal requirements is now only $16,471,-525, and has revived talk of higher interest in the near future.

Speculation closed irregular, weak; net changes show losses of ¼@1¼ per cent. on the day. Reading and Chicago Gas gained ⅛@½ per cent. Total sales were 106,952 shares, including 22,500 Tobacco, 8800 United States Cordage, 8500 St. Paul, 7200 Atchison, and 6900 Chicago Gas.

Bonds were lower; sales footed up to $995,000.

CHICAGO GRAIN.

Chicago, Oct. 5.—The same crowd of local bulls that has been playing so unsuccessfully for an advance in wheat during the past week made another attempt to boom the market this morning, but met with little encouragement. A few fractions' rise took place but failed to hold, and early buyers become sellers later. The movement in Minneapolis and Duluth and the belief that Chicago might expect heavy consignments from that direction in the near future presented an argument against prices that it was difficult to controvert. Liverpool cables this morning were steady; our decline of yesterday apparently having no effect on that market. The week's clearances from both coasts aggregated 2,613,000 bushels. Arrivals in the Northwest were 1274 cars and Chicago had 191 cars. Withdrawals from store were 18061 bushels and 138,043 bushels cleared at the Atlantic seaboard. Prices began to slide rapidly about 11 o'clock, a break of ¾ cents taking place and the tone continuing depressed until the close. Closing continental cables were lower. The announcement of 265 cars estimated for Monday at this place added intensity to the weakness. December wheat opened from 60⅛ to 60⅜, sold between 60⅝ and 59½, closing at 59½@59⅝, ⅛@⅝ under yesterday.

Corn—The situation in this grain was without change. Trade was dull and the indifference of speculation still very marked. Prices changed but slightly, the feeling evidencing sympathy with wheat. Receipts were 615 cars, 18 more than expected. Withdrawals from store were large at 441,184 bushels and 145,808 bushels cleared at the seaboard. May corn opened at 29¼, sold at 29⅝, declined to and closed at 29¼, ⅛ under yesterday. Liverpool quoted a decline on spot corn with futures steady. Estimated receipts for Monday 750 cars.

THE WHITE CROW CO.

A Valuable Boulder Proposition with Head Office Here.

The prospectus of the White Crow Gold Mining company is just to hand. It sets forth the aims and objects of the company very fully and clearly, and to those who are interested in mining stock speculation it may be profitable to peruse it.

Briefly the company owns the White Crow and Osceola lodes in Boulder county. Many hundreds of feet of work have been done on the properties, some $400,-000 worth of ore has been produced and there is now over $550,000 worth in sight.

The following extract from the prospectus will explain what is proposed to be done by the company:

"The $400,000 that has been taken from the mine came from high-grade, or ore that averaged over $200 per ton in value. There are seams and bunches of bonanza mineral often carrying $3 and more per pound, while the mass of ore, measuring from three to five feet wide, runs from $20 to $40 per ton. Experience teaches that the only profitable method of operating the White Crow property is to win the treasure in all ore as broken from the stopes, and not to depend on marketing the high-grade, and abandoning the great mass of low-grade after the costly handling of securing the more valuable product. Hence it is proposed to build at the mine a cyaniding plant of 50 tons daily capacity, operated by electricity, the power for generating the current can be supplied from a stream, a mile and a half distant, having an ample flow at all seasons. The proposed treatment plant complete will require an outlay of $50,000. Of the 2,500,000 shares of the capital stock one-fifth belongs to the treasury for development requirements, and of this amount 300,000 shares are now offered for 20 cents a share to build the mill and to sink the new working shaft to the junction of the veins. At 20 cents for the 2,-000,000 shares held by the stockholders—the property would bring $400,000. In this connection it can be cited that the owners refused a cash offer for the mine of $350,000, made a few weeks ago, convinced that it will be worth many times that figure so soon as the ore can be treated on the ground."

The company is free of litigation and its headquarters are in this city.

CRIPPLE AND EUROPE

AN INTERESTING LETTER FROM PARIS AND A SUGGESTION.

The Writer Suggests that Dr. Schmeisser should Visit Cripple Creek—France and Germany are His Followers—A Word or Two Regarding the Doctor.

The following extracts are from a letter addressed to one of our most prominent brokerage firms. They were written by one of the shrewdest investors in Paris and, as the matter contained therein will show, by one who is backed by a vast amount of experience in mining matters. As the remarks apply directly to our stock market and to Cripple Creek they are of more than passing importance and will be read with interest:

The letter opens with an order for a good sized block of Argentum Juniata and then goes on to say: "I selected Juniata—the neglected and out of fashion silver stock—because silver appears to be more in favor, also rupees, to which the news contributed, that the famous Huanchaca mine in Bolivia, is flooded and will not be able to produce for a considerable time.

"The market for gold shares has been very brisk. The last London account, however, has uncovered such an enormous position for the rise, that brokers had some difficulty in the carrying over. Very high rate of contango have had to be summitted to by weak speculators, hence at this very moment realizations take place with partial lowering all round. But the much apprehended final 'crash' is far off. The present lull is rather salutary.

"It appears that Mr. Hamilton Smith's doings have not had, so far, the favorable influence on Cripple Creek matters foreseen by many people. I am afraid that he may not be the real 'Messiah' for your district. I suggest that it would be of far greater advantage to try to get Dr. Schmeisser pay a visit to Cripple Creek.

"He is now in Western Australia, not as a special agent of the Prussian government as he was in the Transvaal, but he was this time appointed by a French-English syndicate. I am convinced that he cannot be bribed and that his report will be sincere and reliable.

"Should this man go to Colorado and report favorably on the mines, the whole crowd who followed his advice and made money in the Transvaal ventures, would jump at Cripple Creek mines."

The Dr. Schmeisser referred to above was sent to South Africa by order of the imperial government of Germany, as a matter of safety, when speculators in that country first turned their eyes towards the Witwaterstrand. The verdict was most favorable to the Dark Continent and England, France and Germany became heavier speculators than ever in South Africans. The Doctor's final report was contained in a volume of considerable dimensions and it has now become known as the "South African Bible." It is a book valuable alike to the investor and the prospector and all Europe swears by it.

Following is an article from The West Australia which shows the estimation in which Dr. Schmeisser's visit is held in that country:

"The fame of the gold fields of the colony is not confined to the English speaking communities of the world. Coolgardie has already attracted French and German investors, and the field owes much to the courage and liberality of continental buyers. There have been many experts who have inspected and reported upon the probabilities of the district and the mines. From all parts they have flocked—from three of the great continents, Europe, Africa, and America. Many have been favorably impressed, few have been doubtful, none have been adverse. Of all the visitors there have been none so influentially accredited as the two gentlemen who arrived in Perth on Monday, having journeyed out to Australia by the R. M. S. Parramatta. Herr Schmeisser, the Royal Councillor of Mines to the German government, and his assistant, Dr. Vogelsang, the Gov. assessor, are authorized by the imperial authorities to report upon the goldfield resources of Western Australia. Herr Schmeisser had been retained by a London corporation to visit this colony, but before the German government would consent to its Royal Councillor of Mines undertaking the task, a condition was imposed that his report should also be submitted to the government. The two scientists were making their first perambulation of the city streets on Monday morning when they fell a prey to the interviewer. They accepted the inevitable very pleasantly, and submitted to be plied with questions on what they had done, what they proposed to do, and why they proposed to do it. 'I understand,' said the interviewer, 'that you hold a commission to report to the German government on the gold resources of this country.' 'It is expected,' was the next query, 'that your report will have a marked effect on the speculation on the Continent in West Australian mines.' 'That is very likely,' said Dr. Vogelsang. 'As you have no doubt heard, Herr Schmeisser visited the South African republic some two years ago and his report had considerable influence on the investment of capital in the mines of that country.' 'It was before the monetary conference held in Berlin a year ago,' added Herr Schmeisser, 'some facts and figures were required as to the probable gold yield for a number of years to come, and the government directed me to visit and estimate as far as possible the resources of the Witwaterstrand. I made out there were hundreds of millions of gold there, and I embodied my opinions and reasons in a book of considerable size.' 'May I ask the name of the volume?' asked the interviewer. 'Its title,' said the scientist, 'was Ueber Verkommen und Zerrinnung der wichtigeren nutzbaren mineralischen Bodenschatze in der sudafricanischen Republik unter besondrer Berucksichtigung des Goldbergbaus.' 'Do you understand German?' 'No,' said the reporter. 'It was a book on the appearance and direction of the deposits of the more important useful mineral resources of the South African Republic, with particular reference to the auriferous deposits,' said Herr Schmeisser, kindly translating. 'And do you propose to write a similar book on Western Australia?' asked the interviewer. 'Yes,' replied Herr Schmeisser. 'It will take a long time,' said the reporter. 'Possibly about three or four months after I have returned to Berlin,' was the reply. 'I cannot say. In South Africa it is possible to make an approximate calculation, but in Western Australia—I cannot say. I have not yet seen the goldfields, and from what I learn it will not be easy to make a similar calculation. I will, however, make a short report first, as I did on the resources of the Witwaterstrand. That report was published in the German Reichsanzeiger, and was entitled "The extent of the gold deposits of the South African Republic."' 'When do you propose going to Coolgardie?' was the next inquiry. 'We will go in about a week or ten days,' said Dr. Vogelsang. 'We will first collect all the information about the colony, as the report will not only deal with the mineral resources, but with trade and facilities for commerce. We will then go to the Coolgardie and Kalgoorlie fields, and will afterwards visit the Murchison. It is possible, too, that we may visit Dundas.' 'And I may come and have another chat with you when you have visited the fields?' asked the reporter. 'Certainly,' replied Herr Schmeisser, 'we will be very pleased to give you any information you may require. We would like to tell you how very pleased we are with the kind reception given to us in Albany by Mr. J. A. Wright and others, and for the hospitality which has been shown to us ever since we landed in the colony.'"

Matt France Meeting.

At the meeting of the Matt France Mining and Milling company, held yesterday the following directors were elected: J. K. Miller, president; Dr G. P. Robinson, vice president; W. W. Williamson, secretary and treasurer; H. A. West, A. Hemenway, H. A. Fuller, S. Davidson. The company has no debts, money in the treasury and 85,000 shares of treasury stock. The property of the company consists of the Black Hawk lode on Grouse mountain, which is patented, and 40 acres of school section on Grouse mountain. It is thought that the Prince Albert vein runs across the Black Hawk. It is the intention of the company to lease part of the property and actively push development.

Current News.

The Dolly Varder, owned by the Enterprise company, has not resumed work as yet; money to pay the labor is said to be the question with the company. What in the world has been done with all the royalties the lessees turned over?—(Morning Times.

EDITH SESSIONS TUPPER'S IMPRESSIONS IN DARKEST SAN FRANCISCO.

A Blot Upon Civilization—The Plague Spot of a Great City The Chinese Theater An Infamous Resort—Heathen Characteristics—A Nightmare.

[Special Correspondence.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 25. "If you want to go through Chinatown and see it thoroughly and in all its phases, get Billy Glennon to take you," was the advice tendered me by those who know the ropes.

So I sought Mr. William Glennon, who for ten years was a police officer in Chinatown and who now is the detective of the Palace hotel. Glennon is a veritable Beau Brummel in appearance, manner and dress. He boasts of having conducted more distinguished visitors through Chinatown than any other policeman in San Francisco. His watch chain sports a handsome locket given him by Henry Irving as a souvenir of the actor's trip, and ladies of all ranks and professions, from Mrs Harrison to Amelie Rives, have been his protegees on visits to the most picturesque quarter of San Francisco.

MURDERERS' ALLEY.

"Frankly," said he as we made our arrangements, "there are a lot of catchpenny fakes in Chinatown calculated to delude and rob the tenderfoot. Guides tell the most amazing stories, which visitors swallow with great gusto. I shall take pleasure in putting you on to some of these fakes for the benefit of the public."

So, really sacrificing myself for the benefit of the great American public, which so loves to be humbugged, I decided to endure the loathsome features of Chinatown for an evening in order to warn others.

An Individual Town.

In the first place, Chinatown is really a little city by itself, a town swarming and bristling with these weird, curious folks who in consciously running hither and thither remind one of nothing so much as an army of black beetles, hurrying about, disappearing suddenly in the ground and as suddenly bobbing up again. There are 30,000 of these black beetles in Chinatown, and every one of them is out after nightfall. You step from the crowded modern American streets of San Francisco straight into a bit of heathendom The transformation is so sudden it feazes you for a time. Down narrow streets filled with truckers' shops, chicken coops, temporary pigpens, fish stalls, wood piles, baskets and dirt you go, holding your nose. The flare of burning peanut oil on little braziers illuminates the gaudy josshouses, the deafening crash of tomtoms and bang of cymbals from the theaters torment your ears, the mournful Celestial gibberish everywhere resounds, dark, evil faces glare in yours for an instant and are gone, only to be replaced by more dark, evil faces this is Chinatown. These streets center in dismal open courts, reeking in filth and surrounded by rooms scarcely bigger than ratholes wherein the black beetles burrow. "Chinks" thrive best and huddle closest where sunlight cannot come

Many of the poor whites of San Francisco come to buy their meats, poultry and fish of the Chinese butchers. Here is another curious phase of life. The Chinese sell these necessaries cheaper than they can be bought in the city. So at night Chinatown is thronged with poorly dressed white people who are buying tomorrow's meal from the almond eyed folks.

Quite Oriental.

The barber shops are never failing sources of amusement. You stand before them perfectly fascinated by the performances going on therein The sign is a four legged frame, the legs painted green with scarlet knobs on top Inside, the barbers are industriously shaving with razors of triangular shape, about two inches long, an inch wide at one end, hollow ground and weighing about two ounces. Other artists are applying delicate instruments to the cleansing of the eyelids. The refined process of swabbing the ears and pulling hairs out of the nostrils is also in full blast. The walls are decorated with false cues. When a Chinaman is sent to prison, his cue is shaved off. Of course this is a terrible disgrace. When he comes out, the first thing to be done is to get a cue and braid it in with the remains of his former glory. This is the way police officers discover jailbirds. In making an arrest they grab at the cue. If it comes off, they know they have a man with a past a cute way of discovery, in fact. It is a mark of great disrespect to wear the cue coiled in the presence of superiors. The smartest cue I saw in Chinatown was on the head of one of the most notorious highbinders in the quarter. It was at the entrance to Cum Cook alley, or Murderers' row, where more murders are committed than in any other street in Chinatown. "Look behind you quickly," whispered the detective. "There is one of the worst characters among the highbinders." I turned and looked at him. He was a dandy, that one—sleek, trig, jaunty, with wicked, bold eyes, a stare of insolent defiance and a don't-give-a-d n air. He was exquisitely tidy in his dress, and his pigtail almost touched the ground. He nodded to Glennon, eyed our party contemptuously and strutted by like a pompous young peacock.

At the Theater.

The theater! Ah, there was the fun! The price of admission varies with the time of entrance. We went in about 10 o'clock and paid "four bits," as they say there, or 50 cents, apiece. Chinamen go in early in the evening for 25 cents and later for 10 cents. If the play stops one minute before midnight, the audience can demand and get its money back. No women are allowed on the floor of the theater. They sit in the boxes, while visitors go upon the stage and sit with the players. It is certainly a trial for one's nerves and risibilities There are no curtains, no flies, no wings. The musicians sit at the back of the stage with their coats off, keeping up a din with gongs, tomtoms, fiddles and cymbals which is simply infernal. But fearful as it is, it is as nothing to the yells of the heavy villain or the shrill squawks of the victimized heroine.

The actors paint their faces in the most frightful fashion. An Apache out for gore would not show such a variety of colors. The whole performance is like a hideous nightmare and funny beyond any expression. The Chinamen, though, take it very seriously, and the only ones who laughed were those who nudged each other to see me laugh. Any one who likes walks up from the audience and wanders in and out the dressing rooms at the back of the stage. Over the stage is the josshouse of the actors and back of this their living rooms, for they never go out of the theater if they can avoid it. Chinamen have the most utter contempt for actors, and if they catch them on the street will tear their clothing from them and beat them until they are black in the face. "Him ki-ti. Him no good. Him actor man. Him paint him face. Him dress up all same woman," is the summary of their disdainful opinions of the mummer. Apropos of which, Mr. Glennon told me this amusing story of Irving: Among other places the great actor visited was a pawnshop where he bought a lot of beautiful Chinese curios, weapons and pipes. While he was buying he chatted with the Chinese pawnbroker about actors and received his opinion of their worthlessness with a quiet smile As Irving went up the steps of the cellar shop Glennon turned to the pawnbroker and said: "Well, John, you have put your foot in it this time. That is the greatest English speaking actor on earth." John tore at his cue in horror and wailed: "Him actor man! Me believe him minister man Me heap d n foolee."

Baits For the Unwary.

The opium joints! Notwithstanding the stringent statutes against this evil, there are 3,000 "hop heads," or "opium fiends," in San Francisco today and in Chinatown nearly 300 joints. This is the greatest evil this fair city has to deal with. A menace anywhere, it is here a positive threat. One of the most famous, or infamous, joints is that kept by "Blind Annie," who is one of the catchpenny fakes to delude the dimes out of tourists' pockets. "Blind Annie," with her "thousand cats," is the bait which lures the tenderfoot who fancies he is to behold a marvelous sight. The joint is in a dingy cellar reached by a foul alley. It is a room of about 120 square feet. There is not a bit of ventilation. On a greasy, rotten bed sits the little old hag fondling her four or five cats and a mangy, wheezy dog She is not so blind that she cannot see Detective Glennon's hand as he holds out a coin, which she eagerly clutches and mumbles over. This joint is frequented by white girls who wish to hit the pipe. There are plenty others, dozens of nasty holes, with tiers of bunks waiting for the victims of the "dope" In one close, foul room I stood and watched an old, old man, who looked to be 150 at least, roll his pill and heat it at the nut oil lamp. Around the room lay men and women in various stages of drunkenness and dishabille. "It was through that window," whispered Mr. Glennon, "that a woman sprang one night when a raid was made on this joint. I caught her, but could not drag her back, as she was very heavy. Another officer went around and took her down outside." The most notorious joint for whites is Ah King's on Jackson street. As we came out of the stifling, disgusting room something flitted through the gloom before us like a ghost something that turned its face aside as if fearful of being seen and slunk into a dark corner near a doorway and waited there for us to pass. Even in the shadow of this black courtyard one could see that this cowering, shivering object was a wreck, a phantom, a terrible thing!

There is yet another feature of Chinatown which is quite as loathsome the traffic in Chinese women, which goes steadily on in spite of laws against it. These girls are at the bottom of the many terrible murders committed in Chinatown. This is the way of it: There is a Chinese vendetta, organized and carried on as systematically as any in Italy. Say that a highbinder, a member of the Lee family, has a young pretty slave who is worth from $1,000 to $2,500 a year to him; that a member of the Wang family, realizing her commercial value, abducts that girl. The Lee family immediately sets forth and kills every member of the Wang family caught out on general principles If anything is left of the tribe, it retorts on the Lee family. The highbinders use 45 caliber Colts and carry them lying over their arms. Many of the fiercest are domestics in service in San Francisco. There are many instances of a Chinaman's committing an atrocious murder in Chinatown and then calmly going to his employer's house to cook breakfast. And a majority of these murders are committed over some handsome young slave

Honest Labor.

Chinamen raise nearly all the vegetables grown in California. They are first class market gardeners. They are good shoemakers, and many fashionable San Francisco women have their shoes made in Chinatown. They are splendid cooks and are very useful as scullions and are often employed to do chamberwork in hotels. They will quit domestic service quicker than any other servants known, and they have some secret and mysterious way of leaving a record of their dissatisfaction in their rooms for the benefit of their successors, thus establishing a boycott difficult to combat unless the mistress of the house can discover the warning. They are very tenacious of their rights as they understand them.

Their profanity is something appalling. Their oaths and curses are ingenious and novel. They hope that their enemies may be chopped into mince meat, that they may rot by inches, and other choice anathemas. They have perfect control of their features, rarely laugh or cry, never show any affection and have no fear of death They are industrious, economical and peaceable, never giving offense in the street. They will lie, but their honesty in deed is not below that of any mercantile class. They are morally vicious, depraved and clannish to a degree.

When you have done Chinatown and emerged at midnight from one of its famous restaurants, you go home wondering if after all, it wasn't a nightmare. And for days you see the black beetles scurrying hither and yon, diving into the earth, burrowing there, then sticking up their ugly black heads and crawling out again.

THE LISTENER.

Hoke Smith was admitted to the bar at the age of 17 years.

John E. Hudson, president of the Bell Telephone company, is one of the best Greek scholars in America.

Ex-Senator Ingalls of Kansas was at Williams college with President Garfield, graduating the year before him.

The Italian premier, Crispi, is said to spend two hours a day in dressing, and he has a horror of getting to look old.

James Dool, now the landlord of the Prince George hotel, Stonehouse, England, who is 92 years old, is said to be the oldest actor in the world.

Police Commissioner Roosevelt of New York, according to Julian Ralph, is not a martinet. He is too fond of fun to be stern except on rare occasions.

C. Rowland Hill, an Episcopalian missionary in Kansas, could own an English title of nobility, left him by a recently deceased father, but he prefers to be an American citizen.

Lord Roberts of Kandahar is to have a brass monument at Calcutta while he is yet alive. Eleven old fashioned brass muzzle loading cannon have just been sent to India from London for the statue.

M. Louis Coulon, a distinguished French lawyer, has a beard nearly 8 feet in length. Unfortunately he stands less than 5 feet 6 inches and is compelled to wear this unique adornment in coils around his neck.

E. E. Lander of South Paris, Me., can attire himself in a broadcloth coat aged 40, boots 20, breeches 30, carry a pocketbook 130 years old and a gun about the same and ride on a wagon wheel 75 years old.

Sir Henry James, who might have been lord chancellor had he liked, wears the shabbiest clothes perhaps of any celebrity of the day. His tall hats are, however, always conspicuous for their immaculate glossiness.

An American who met William Waldorf Astor in a little hotel on the summit of a Swiss mountain says that the expatriated millionaire has grown very stout of recent years and his appearance is that of a typical Englishman.

Mayor Strong of New York has won the title of the "Marrying Mayor." He has united more couples in wedlock during his term of office than his three predecessors, Messrs. Hewitt, Grant and Gilroy, did altogether during their terms.

Dr. Forbes Winslow, who created a sensation recently by declaring that Sir Walter Scott died insane, not only still holds to that opinion, but asserts that Shakespeare died from drunkenness, and that many other poets and geniuses died from insanity.

George Augustus Sala, the well known correspondent and editor of the London Telegraph, who is lying ill in Brighton, England, is in such a bad condition financially as well as physically that a fund has been started by the London press to remove his embarrassment.

Literary Department.

THE TREND OF POPULAR LITERATURE.

IN TWO PARTS—PART I.

A paper read before the Colorado State Federation of Women's Clubs, at Colorado Springs, Tuesday, Oct. 1, by Mrs. C. C. Roberts [illegible]

"All books are [illegible] books, the books of the hour and the books of all time," [illegible] this century. [illegible] which must [illegible] dissolution [illegible] it not [illegible] scientific [illegible] an age in which men have sought out many inventions, [illegible] too many for their own [illegible] Nordau, [illegible] book, "Degeneration," [illegible] and elect [illegible] of the last [illegible] years, [illegible] to a school [illegible] ally responsible for man's degeneracy, art's decline and literature's decadence, from all of which it [illegible] that Max Simon Nordau has an unmistakable [illegible] much abused letter of the alphabet, the capital I.

In so far as he assails the present, he is worthy of commendation for his contribution to what in one sense must be [illegible] unpopular literature. When he despairs of the future, we should beware of him as a false prophet. Viewing modern life as carefully as we may, we cannot blind ourselves to the fact that a spirit of unrest prevails and is mirrored with appalling distinctness in an ephemeral literature. As we live completely in the present, I speak of the immediate present, not of the first half or three-quarters of the century, characterized as it was by a race of literary giants, whose mantle is now fretted by the moth, whose stylus is corroded with rust, not for lack of clamoring contestants for their inheritance, but because no worthy, rightful heir has established his claim to them. Far better moth and rust than to see the mantle fall grotesquely about dwarfed shoulders, the stylus wielded by palsied hand.

The good writers, like the good Indians, are dead; books are of the hour, the horoscope of the few, if any, indicating long life, much less that they should endure through all time, the solid granite of legitimate literature has for the last few decades been [illegible] into the sketchy magazine article, the purpose novel, the short story, while poetry has reached the vanishing point.

That the magazine is altogether satisfactory to the major portion of the reading public, is proven by the remark we so frequently hear. "I do not pretend to keep abreast of the literature of the day, the magazines are as much as I can manage." In the face of such a speech, always delivered in tones of righteous self-gratulation, it requires temerity to find fault with the multitudinous magazine, with its dissertations on every imaginable subject, from encomiums on the looks and manners of the New York "saleslady" to bickerings about the tariff and disputes on the silver question, though how there could be one point on that problem the mind of a Coloradoan cannot conceive. The contributor quails not at the thought of coping with any subject, however vast or important, in the necessarily limited space of an installment or two; for not fiction alone, but science, history, biography and descriptions of foreign lands are now treated in this disjointed fashion. Then should all other topics fail, the man or woman who has written a successful book can generally be induced to tell you how it was done. Like the magician who dupes the spectator into thinking his jugglery a perfect miracle, then spoils all by explaining the trick to his audience. The jest, the [illegible] story all lose their flavor when explanations follow. That maxim of the ancient Greeks, "Nothing too much," would make a fitting motto for the [illegible] period, with its heterogeneous [illegible] tive illustrations, [illegible] and its ever present short story, which to use a [illegible] end in the [illegible] do well to bear [illegible] unquenchable thirst [illegible] information which is not knowledge though akin to it, he skips lightly from one topic to another, thus acquiring a mere smattering of many, but no comprehensive grasp of any one, and finally [illegible] impossible to concentrate the attention on anything of real importance, for it is not how much, but how well we read that reaps us benefit.

But the magazine [illegible] proportions [illegible] parent stem [illegible] reputation [illegible] fiction. I had almost [illegible] and simple but [illegible] applies to the novel of the present. Never is it the Book Beautiful in the truest sense, for though it is most attractive to look upon, rarely, indeed, does it happen that the fair exterior covers anything more [illegible] than the dust and ashes of Dead Sea apples. Time was when we kept theology, history, politics, pathology separate from our love stories. It is so no longer. Two or three volumes on any of these themes would fall cold from the press, but disguise one of them with a liberal sugar coating of fiction, and use it to adorn a tale, and that novel will go [illegible] editions in less than a year.

You frequently hear it urged, in extenuation of the purpose novel, that Scott wrote historical romances, that Dickens's works teem with purpose, that Thackeray's have all the deep underlying moral lesson. Granted, but these men also happened at the same time to make themselves interesting to the entire English speaking world, [illegible] successors almost [illegible] to do. Successors? It were little short of profanation to mention in the same breath with this triumvirate [illegible] Stanley Weymans, [illegible] Hall Caines of to-day. As well compare Raphael's Madonna [illegible] —a comedy of Shakespeare [illegible] Hoyt's, an oratorio of [illegible] Offenbach operetta. [illegible] those—may their tribe decrease—to whom a novel, whether written by George Eliot or Mary Jane Holmes, a yellow-back [illegible] is to them, "and it is nothing more" [illegible] plaything with which to while away an idle hour, then to be cast aside and forgotten. Instead, we should be able to regard it as a wonderful work of art, faithfully representing nature. No matter what name men give it, whether Realism or Romanticism, whether it is born [illegible] neither, so it be elevating in tone, "a thing of beauty, a joy forever." Its function is to entertain, certainly, since the Gladstones who find their mental recreation in translating a book of the Iliad, or an ode of Horace, are rare, and the great reading public turn to the novel for amusement, for "all the world loves a lover," and a love story.

But seeking rest, refreshment and amusement, which, if present, is not antagonistic to improvement, how are we regaled? With the pure, clean, and wholesome? with subtle wit, genial humor, [illegible] pathos, or sublime [illegible] soul-stirring theme? Alas, no; but with the prosy theological discussion, the [illegible] argument on heredity or sex problems, and a variety of other wearisome and unsavory subjects, which may be [illegible] ing a momentary ripple on the social sea. And they are popular, why is it? Were the writer asked, he would probably [illegible] for art's sake, [illegible] the reformation of mankind. But be it remembered [illegible] an unregenerate [illegible] the novel will [illegible] prove fatal to the goose that lays the golden eggs, were the [illegible] to tell the reader that his insistent clamor for "something new" had created a demand for [illegible] literature. A [illegible] we are getting to the [illegible] of the [illegible] [illegible] days there is but one law for all, be he butcher, baker, or story-book maker, the law of supply and demand. We hear a great deal about the poor, dear, long-suffering public, but [illegible] the public's demand for what Jerome K. Jerome forcibly, if inelegantly, calls "erotic, neurotic and tommyrotic literature," cease and we should soon see it slinking out of sight. I do not mean, of course, that a Scott, Dickens, Thackeray or "George Eliot" would at once arise; their names are to fiction what Homer's, Dante's, Shakespeare's and Goethe's are to poetry, and Lowell calls them, together with Cervantes, the "indispensable poets." But the revolt of the reading public would crush "graphomania"; would send many a fancied Burns back to his plough; would undeceive many a world weary man with a tinge of cynicism who now poses as a Thackeray; might convince many a woman with a history that everybody was not dying to hear it, and on the whole it were better left unchronicled; it would prevent every tyro in journalism rushing into print with stories in dialects such as we never dreamed of in our philology, and it would warn those who remained in the [illegible] of letters that they must give us of their best; that we would no longer endure with impunity having them fill in the chinks of their leisure in scribbling, or drag weary feet to their desk after "the cares that infest the day" are over, to burn the midnight oil doing hack work. No wonder that a morbid tone is the keynote of our literature when so often it is the work of an overwrought brain.

"Why will silly mortals strive to the painful pinnacles of championship?" or why, once having reached them, not have the magnanimity and circumspection to retire to private life immediately?" Why, indeed, Mr. George Meredith? Why do you not practice your own most excellent preaching? Why, having achieved renown with "The Ordeal of Richard Feverel" and "Diana of the Crossways" did not you show your wonderful "magnanimity and circumspection" by [illegible] tiring to private life instead of vainly seeking to enhance your reputation with "The Egoist," miscalled "The Egoist" and "Lord Ormont and His Aminta"? Why, because of the [illegible] army whose tactics seem to be to follow up the meritorious with the meretricious? Witness Thomas Hardy, who in "Far from the Madding Crowd" gave us an able and interesting book, if not a great one, and now consents to put his name to such an utter [illegible] as "Hearts Insurgent," dragging its weary length through Harper's. Justin McCarthy, descending from his high estate as a historian, who, in current parlance, made history as interesting as a novel, to write such serial [illegible] stuff as would put a penny-dreadful [illegible] to the blush. Blackmore, [illegible] heroines have [illegible] company for the fawn-like [illegible] Lew Wallace, who in "The Prince of India" [illegible] below [illegible] Mrs. [illegible] whose "Sant' Ilario" [illegible] one of the best, if not the very best novel of the last ten years, whose subsequent work has been so woefully [illegible] Israel Zangwill [illegible] somewhat dramatic [illegible] Master [illegible] [illegible] which has to [illegible] "The [illegible]" [illegible] for with a "Chance of Air" "The [illegible] Car" and those sap [illegible] "The Dolly Dialogues," far with Hope.

A DICKENS-ESQUE NOVEL.

The latest issue in the Hudson Library, published by the Putnams in paper covers, is "At Tuxter's," and it keeps up the remarkably high standard set by its predecessors in the series, all of which have previously been noticed in this column.

Novels often appear which remind one of one of the older masters of English [illegible]—not necessarily because they are imitations, either conscious or unconscious, but because of some peculiarity either of plot or of style. Thus Conan Doyle's "White Company" inevitably provokes a comparison with some of Scott's stories. "Trilby" was a reminder of Thackeray in every chapter, and "Robert [illegible]" could [illegible] "Hillyars and Burtons." [illegible]

It is not often, however, that we come across a novel that reminds us of Dickens. [illegible] brought [illegible] [illegible] "The Year of Jubilee" [illegible] have not seen for years anything [illegible] of the [illegible] of Dickens [illegible] Tuxter and the [illegible]

Tuxter himself, with his profession [illegible] [illegible] Turks, the serving-man, with his everready formula of "Susan knows, sir, Susan knows." The others are not so much in the manner of the older artist, but the situations, which are strongly dramatic, and the brisk movement, and the manner of bringing around the denouement, all warrant us in saying that Mr. Burgin, if he is not an imitator of Dickens, has at least caught his spirit and manner.

As we have intimated, this story is one that would lend itself readily to purposes of dramatic representation. We can almost fancy that we see the actors, as the various situations are developed, and when they are all brought together at the end, for a happy finale, and the respective couples make their final bow to the audience, hand in hand, we really wonder whether the piece was not written first as a play and then "adapted" into a novel.

We do not know that this is a specially improving book, but if you want to be amused and get a good hearty laugh, we know of anything better among the new novels with which to while away an hour or two on a rainy evening.

OCTOBER MAGAZINES.

The contents of the American Historical Review, the first number of which appeared on Oct. 1, includes among the original articles, "History and Democracy," by Prof. William M. Sloane of Princeton, whose "Life of Napoleon," now running in The Century, has attracted so much attention, "The Party of the Loyalists in the American Revolution," by Prof. Moses Coit Taylor, LL. D., of Cornell; "The Castilian Inquisition," by Henry C. Lea, LL. D., of Philadelphia; "Count Edward de Crillon," by Henry Adams, LL. D., of Washington, D. C.; "Western State-making in the Revolutionary Era," by Prof. Frederick J. Turner of the University of Wisconsin. In the department of documents are printed two letters of Col. W. Byrd of Virginia, dated 1736 and 1739, respecting slavery, and indented servants; intercepted letters of Col. George Rogers Clark, written during his campaign of 1778-79; and letters of Howell Cobb and B. H. Hall to Jefferson Davis and Secretary Seddon in January and March, 1865, illustrating the relations of Georgia to the Confederacy. There are also reviews of Hodgkin's "Invaders of Italy," vols. v. and vi.; Stephen's "Life of Freeman," Pollock and Maitland's "History of English Law," Traill's "Social England," Lavisse's "Victor Duruy," Winsor's "Mississippi Basin," Thayer's "Cases in Constitutional Law," Walker's "Making of the Nation," McMaster's "History of the People of the United States," vol. iv.; Rhodes's "History of the United States from 1850," Bigelow's "Life of Tilden," Prowse's "History of Newfoundland," etc., etc.; and there is also a department of Notes and News. This magazine is published by the Macmillans.

Just before the devoted young African explorer E. J. Glave, died at Matadi on the Congo river, he requested the missionaries who attended him to send his papers to The Century Magazine. These have recently arrived in this country in safety, and are found to consist of copious notes and journals and abundant photographic material. Mr. Glave crossed Africa in the interest of this magazine to study the slave trade, and was about to embark for home in order to put his conclusions into shape when he was stricken down by the deadly African fever. It is believed, however, that The Century can obtain two or three striking articles from the material that cost Glave his life to gather. These will appear during the coming year, and a paper on Africa has also been promised by Henry M. Stanley. Mr. Glave was one of Stanley's most trusted lieutenants in the settlement of the Congo stations, and the latter has paid emphatic tribute to Glave's ability and character.

The editor of the Author's Journal has been at some pains to write to the editors of certain magazines to know what sort of articles they are likely to accept. He received a number of answers of which that from Mr. Alden of Harper's gives the situation in a nutshell. "An examination of Harper's Magazine will serve better than any formula to show what kind of articles and stories we are likely to print. Such an examination would, of course, show what ground we cannot go over again, as well as the quality and kind of material we use." It would seem as though what Mr. Alden says would be evident to any one, but he who thinks so does not appreciate the dullness of the average literary aspirant. A casual examination of the pages of any magazine would reveal to an ordinary intellect, one would suppose, the character of the material desired by the editor; but it does not. There are hundreds of scribblers all over the country who would not hesitate to send a love story to The North American Review, or a political essay to The Critic.

LITERARY NOTES.

Harper & Brothers published last week "Showalter's and Sholes's," a sequel to "The Pursued's Trail," by Kirk Munroe; "An English-Greek Dictionary," being a concise [illegible] of the English and Modern Greek languages, as actually written and spoken, by A. M. Jannaris, Ph. D., "Half a Hero," a novel, by Anthony Hope (new edition), and "A Study of Death," by Henry Mills Alden, author of "God in His World."

The illustrated articles on "The Cotton States and International Exposition" which have been prominent in recent numbers of Harper's Weekly will be continued, and Julian Ralph will go to Atlanta next month on behalf of The Weekly. Within a few weeks the same periodical will contain an article on the evolutions of the North American Squadron, written and illustrated by R. F. Zogbaum.

"Hearts Insurgent" will end in the November Harper's. "Briseis," a new serial story by William Black, with illustrations by W. T. Smedley, will begin in the December number.

Harper's Bazar for October 12th will be [illegible] by a varied array of autumn gowns and wraps. The season invites to so much outdoor life, and the tidal flow from country to town is [illegible] so much gayety with it that a [illegible] of fashion finds opportunity for displaying costumes of elegance and taste for all wearers. A practical paper, entitled "The Small [illegible]," by Annie Wetherill Sears, describes minutely a form of [illegible] open to people with limited purses. No detail is omitted which can make the article really helpful.

A remarkable discovery has been made at Eleusis in the course of the excavations, in the shape of a terra-cotta plaque with pedimental top. It is painted in the style of the later Athenian red-figured vases, about 400 B. C., and is in wonderfully good preservation. On the base is inscribed "Minion Anetheken." In the pediment is a figure of Artemis, and below are four female figures carrying the large torches known as bakekoi. These figures evidently represent performers in the Eleusinian mysteries. Thus the plaque is not only artistically interesting, but also on account of its bearing on this difficult question, and it is hoped that a correct interpretation of the subject will throw fresh light on it. (Biblia.

A most interesting work will be published by Macmillan & Co. in their Browning Studies, consisting of papers read before the Browning society of London. There is a general introduction by Edward Berdoe, the author of "The Browning Cyclopaedia," and among the contents are such articles as "The Idea of Personality in Browning," by Professor Hiram Corson of Cornell; "Browning's Philosophy," by John Bury of Trinity College, Dublin; "Browning's View of Life," by the Rev. Prof. B. F. Westcott, D.D., as well as many others of equal interest and importance.

The Westminster Gazette says: "The well-known American editor, Mr. Edward W. Bok, is now in this country on the lookout for literary wares. He has met Mr. Gladstone several times, and he has been [illegible] The New Age some facts about his acquaintance with the G. O. M. Mr. Gladstone, it seems, does not subscribe to the English editions of American magazines, but prefers the American editions because of the advertisements, from which, he says, he is able to study the commercial progress of the country. He has at Hawarden a scrap-book in which he has pasted about 300 or 400 advertisements cut from the American magazines."

Rev. J. E. Hanauer, of Jaffa, suggests that travelers in Palestine be put on their guard against forged "antiques," such as earthenware lamps, which are made wholesale at Naples, from ancient molds, and modern imitations of them. Caution is also needed in the purchase of large stone seals (generally black) bearing in Samaritan or Phenician letters the inscription: "David, King, servant of Jehovah." Of these several exist. One of them was purchased by a late United States consul in Jerusalem, and thought by him to be genuine. Metal plates, with Phenician, Hebrew, or Arabic inscriptions in ancient characters; little idols, cut out of hard limestone, are also offered for sale, but are generally false. In the Nazareth district Jews have been lately realizing fancy prices for ancient glass sold in the United States of America. (Biblica.

It is strange that the novelists should be willing to advertise the ephemeral interest of their productions by adopting titles which are but parodies of the titles of ephemeral work. Mr. Grant Allen's very ephemeral "Woman Who Did" has given illegitimate birth to a "Man Who Did," and a "Man Wouldn't." And Mr. Grant Allen's poor creature herself was but a feeble descendant of Mr. Kipling's "Man Who Was," who, indeed, had already begotten a good many descendants less lasting than himself.—(The Times, London.

We are about to have Mr. William Morris's "Earthly Paradise" abridged into English prose. Says The St. James's Gazette: "Perhaps some philanthropic person will favor us next with a prose translation of Mr. Morris's 'Blue Closet'—which, indeed, does somewhat need the service of the interpreter. Many a reader who has felt the magic of that rehis brother's fine sonnets with a prose paraphrase with some pardonable curiosity as to its logical meaning. Mr. William Rossetti, some six years ago, it may be remembered, considerately furnished [illegible] with a prose translation. But 'The Earthly Paradise' needs no interpreter. It is probably the least unintelligible poem of its generation. It is unquestionably long; but that is a ground for a selection rather than a prose abridgment. Possibly Lamb's 'Tales from Shakespeare' is the precedent relied on. Nobody has yet suggested, we think, a prose translation of Sir Lewis Morris."

In a brief review of Mrs. Humphry Ward's "Bessie Costrell," The Academy says: [illegible] study, so to say, in secondary [illegible] passions of [illegible] ness, of [illegible], of hard self-righteousness, which [illegible] after the first great passions of [illegible] and hate. The [illegible] Mrs. Ward has made her own [illegible] will hardly dare any longer [illegible] them objectively, as a [illegible] howling or adoring as the [illegible] require, after subtle [illegible] analytic handling of them. Yet [illegible] that Mrs. Ward has [illegible] of her best and most telling work [illegible] book, one would doubt whether [illegible] had been worth while [illegible] it is a story of [illegible] temptation, of [illegible] But it hangs perfectly together, and has remarkable dramatic fitness. It shows Mrs. Ward's mastery in a degree of perfection, and one sees from it how much her sense of proportion has been [illegible] since "Robert Elsmere" was written. [illegible] the difficult task of conveying emotion [illegible] the [illegible] of small [illegible] tions she is now almost without a rival."

Civilization as a Curse.

Prof. Flinders Petrie's paper before the British Association on the effects of modern civilization is one of the most remarkable contributions of our day to the literature of education. According to him, "every civilization is the growing product of a very complex set of conditions," and "no attempt to alter such a system apart from its conditions is impossible. No change is legitimate or beneficial to the real character of a people except what flows from conviction and the natural growth of the mind." To force upon other races a civilization "developed in a cold country amid one of the hardest, least sympathetic, and most self-denying and calculating peoples of all the world, is death; we make a dead-house and call it civilization. Scarcely a single race can bear the contact and the burden. And then we talk complacently about the mysterious [illegible] of savages before white men." Of the modern Egyptian under the influence of Anglo-Saxon civilization he says: "The European-Egyptian [illegible] more [illegible] of civilization. * * * You manufacture [illegible] Some of the peasantry are taught to read [illegible] and the result of this [illegible] fathers [illegible] fools. I [illegible] Egyptian who has had [illegible] that I have met with, hardly [illegible] or incapable of taking care of himself. * * * With the Copt it is quite different—his fathers have been scribes for thousands of years. * * * Observation of these people leads to the conclusion that the average man cannot receive much more knowledge than his immediate ancestors. * * * Our bigoted belief in reading and writing is not in the least justified when we look at the mass of mankind." Concluding, he said: "It is the business of anthropology to step in, and make a knowledge of other civilizations a part of all decent education.

The origin and utility of the various customs and habits need to be pointed out, and in what way they are reasonable and helpful to the well-being of the community. And, above all, we ought to impress on every boy that this civilization in which he grows is only one of innumerable experiments in life that have been tried; that it is by no means the only successful one, or, perhaps, not the most successful, that there has been, that there are many other solutions of the problems of community and culture which are as good as our own, and that no one solution will fit a different race, climate, or set of conditions. * * * The books required for such reading should cover the life of Greece, Rome, Babylon, Egypt and Mexico in ancient times; and China, India, Persia, Russia, Spain and one or two low civilizations, such as the Andamans and the Zulus, in modern times. Neither historic nor travels are wanted for this purpose, but a selection of the literature which shall most illustrate the social life and frame of the community, with full explanations and illustrations. * * * Where no literature is available, a [illegible] study of the nature of the practical working of their [illegible] should take its place."

LOVE'S CRUELTY

A busy child at thoughtless play,
  Found a curious seed with colors rare,
Planted it in a pot of clay
  And left it growing forgotten there.

One day long after, by by fancy led,
  He sought the spot, to his dismay,
A strange wild shrub now reared its head,
  Above the shattered pot of clay.

And thus, Love grew within my heart,—
  A tender plant, whose perfect bloom,
Seemed from the world afar, apart,
  And filled my life with sweet perfume.

But, oh, in time, its branches spread:
  Its fairy blossoms withered lay;
Its roots have burst my heart, now dead,
  And left it worthless broken clay.

GEORGE W. JACKSON.

Calhan, Colo., 1895.

The Outdoor Woman.

The prevailing fashion in women's bicycling costumes seems to be somewhat a question of geography. In Paris it has been decided that nothing but the bloomer, knickerbocker, or some form of the bifurcated garment is suited for the purpose. Skirts are regarded as utterly unadapted for wheeling, and have been almost entirely discarded for the purpose, as nearly all the models of Paris bicycle suits show. In London, on the other hand, according to a recent correspondent, although the number of women who ride is large, few bloomers are seen, and they do not meet with general favor. Apparently the English are too conservative to adopt so radical a change with the readiness shown by their Gallic neighbors.

Here in America we have all the varieties in evidence, from the knickerbocker with scarce a suspicion of fulness to the ordinary long and full skirt, which latter, however, is happily seldom seen, its danger having been proved on many occasions. Besides these there is a wide choice, and any one ought to be able to select from among the many a costume which suits her ideas as to comfort and appearance. Recent observation of both city and suburban cyclists has led me to the conclusion that at present the style most commonly seen consists of a skirt of what may be called three-quarter length—that is, reaching about half-way between the knee and the ground. Under this [illegible] and leggings extend from the knee to the ankle. A skirt of this length will not catch anywhere, and if it is made heavy and rather scant it will not blow about in the wind, which is an annoying fault of many.

There are many who think and predict that, before a couple of years shall have passed, the bloomer for bicycle use will remain practically supreme. It seems doubtful, though, now that a suit has been devised which has a skirt and is still comfortable and safe, whether the women who dislike to appear in that [illegible] attire will ever adopt it.—(Harper's Bazar.

FACTS CONCERNING ITS RECENT GROWTH AND PROSPERITY.

Changes Since the War—Reckless Exaggeration—Its New Manufactures. An Indigenous School of Literature—Notes of the Atlanta Exhibition.

[Special Correspondence.]

ATLANTA, Sept. 29. Veterans of the Army of the Cumberland who on their way here attended the G. A. R. encampment at Louisville and the dedication at Chickamauga park tell me that all their other enjoyments are second to the interest they take in the amazing changes in the country. Among them is an unusually large proportion of private soldiers and men of moderate means—men who have traveled but little since the war—and to these men it is just as if a great panorama were unrolled before their eyes, the general view of 1864 giving place with one turn of the crank to the general view of 1895. They grow fiercely enthusiastic in talking of the great stock farms and lovely peach orchards on the line of the Bragg and Buell races in 1862, of the great iron furnaces northwest of Chattanooga and the manufactories in that city, of the finely equipped railways and pretty passenger stations, and, most of all, of the bewildering stir and action of Atlanta, which was, aside from the military, but a dull place when they first saw it and mostly ruins when they left it.

Reckless Exaggeration.

Now, in all this there is a deal of truth, but lest we blow the southern trumpet a little too loud it is well to begin with some cautionary statements of fact. It is first to be noted that the boys of 1864-5 saw all this country at its worst, not only because of war's desolation, but of their ignorance of the soil and its capacities. To a newcomer from the central northwest an old field in this middle south looks like a desert. In 1864 our regiment passed the summer at Bridgeport, Ala., and the boys were forever comparing the red earth of that section with the fat black soil of the Wabash country and wondering how any one could extract a living from "such an old brickyard." Now every one of those little coves in the Cumberland mountains is like a garden of Eden for loveliness, and the wonderful "blue springs," from which we hauled water for our camp—springs a rod square, in which the longest plummet line could find no bottom—are fashionable resorts for health or pleasure. Through what was then a wooded wilderness between the mountains and the river long trains of cars pass almost hourly, bearing coal and iron ore from the Cumberland plateau, and from the site of our camp, then so solitary, one can see the smoke of seven furnaces. So far so good, but along with this goes the usual evil, which is thus forcibly set forth by Mr. T. H. Martin of The Dixie Magazine in a recent talk with me:

"They have run the thing into the ground and made the south ridiculous by wholesale and reckless exaggeration. There are two papers of influence in the south which have a system of counting that practically multiplies from five to ten fold. They count an enterprise when it is first projected, then when the company is organized, again when work is begun, and so on till, without exactly saying so, they convey the impression that the south is thickset from river to sea with manufactories. It is just now impossible to get exact statistics, but within my own knowledge there are at least eight very large cotton mills nearly completed, of which the four most noted are at Atlanta and Rome, Ga.; Gadsden, Ala., and Pelzer, S. C. You speak of seeing new mills in process of construction at every important place along the Southern railroad. Well, those are all additions and enlargements, good in their way, but not new enterprises. It's the same with mines and furnaces and iron works generally. I have been fighting that sort of thing, and they call me a pessimist, but exaggeration is liable to do us great harm."

It is difficult to get the exact figures down to date, but it is not impossible as "Dixie" Martin thinks, for there are many gentlemen now at the exposition who are too deeply interested to be misled and who keep tab on their particular lines down to every Saturday night. Mr. William A. Knowles of the Rome (Ga.) Tribune gives me the exact present situation in his bailiwick and modestly claims that the new cotton mill there will be the greatest in the south. It is constructed by the Massachusetts Cotton company and is to be in operation by Jan. 1. The village in which the operatives are to live will add at least 2,000 to the population of Rome. General Willard Warner, senator from Alabama in 1870 and thereabout, keeps the exact figures to date on iron and its related products. The gentlemen and many others make heavy deductions from recently published statistics, and still the residue is wonderful. Taking the general statements published at the beginning of this year in the larger editions of the Boomer papers and adding or discounting to date, according to the experts, men themselves in the business, I think the following facts certain:

Material Progress.

In the 15 years from 1880 to 1895 the number of manufacturing establishments in the south, exclusive of Delaware, Maryland and Missouri, increased from [illegible],565 to 50,300, the capital invested from $179,-336,600 to $[illegible], the employees from 215,460 to 500,000 and the wages paid from $[illegible] to about $[illegible]. In 1880 the total of [illegible] in this section was [illegible]; last year the [illegible] amount will [illegible] as much, of which nearly [illegible] from West Virginia. Many other [illegible] do the [illegible], but [illegible] of them are [illegible] are to be verified by any [illegible]. For instance, the total value of farm products in 1880 was $611,[illegible],445, according to the census, and this year the optimists think it will be 50 per cent greater in value, while the pessimists insist that if prices were good it would be 10 per cent greater, as the product is certainly doubled. At the same time they claim even more confidently on this year's cotton crop, one school asserting that it will amount over 6,500,-000 bales, and the man who sells for less than 10 cents will live to kick himself, and the other that it is nearer 8,000,000 and the man who does not sell while it is up will be sorry. But as neither party can prove anything let us, as Alonzo Altsonant said, "anchor to the immutable past and not soar into the illimitable regions of ultra vires."

Interesting as the exhibit is and important in a material point of view, I confess that I am still more interested in the great fact that since the war southern writers have literally created an indigenous school of literature. Indigenous it certainly is, and that beyond all question by any critic. It is unlike any other literature and simply could not have been produced anywhere else but in the highlands of the central south. That remarkable California literature which began perhaps as early as 1855 and culminated in Bret Harte, Prentice Mulford and their contemporaries was not more racy of its native soil, but of all that, be it noted, no part was produced by native Californians, while of this every line is by men and women born and reared among and inspired by the scenes they describe. A score of years ago Judge Tourgee, author of "The Fool's Errand," etc., predicted that in 30 years after the war closed literary sympathy, or rather the general tone of the most popular literature, would be in favor of the Confederates. He probably drew that conclusion from the historic commonplace that there are always more romance and sentiment about the lost cause, if the defeated have fought long and well, than the victorious, as with the Irish of 1691 and the Scotch Jacobites. Be that as it may, it is a palpable fact that Thomas Nelson Page, Joel Chandler Harris, Richard Malcolm Johnston, Amelie Rives Chanler, "Charles Egbert Craddock," Frank L. Stanton, Henry Clay Fairman and many others have kindled here a flame which has startled the world and by retrospect cast a halo of sentiment and glory upon the grave of the dead Confederacy.

At the Exhibition.

All this is a long way from the Cotton States and International exposition, which I am supposed to be seeing and describing, but despite the rapid progress the exposition is still not quite at its best, and when I walk through it I see at every turn such cheering proofs of progress in sections of the south I visited many years ago that in the retrospect I forget the present show. Early in 1881 I traveled nine weeks in the central south, and at the end recorded a prophecy that this section—the highland central and piedmont south—was to be the location of a finer civilization than any yet known; that it would have enough of the push and energy of the north without that hard materialistic spirit that too often goes with it; that it would develop even more of that bonhomie and high toned courtesy with which the old aristocracy of the south was credited and without the attendant evils, and, in short, that the white race would in these plateaus and in this middle latitude attain and long maintain the highest average of physical strength and mental activity. But I am totally unable to agree with southerners as to the future of the lowland south. A glance at the map will show that from this central plateau the streams flow to every point of the compass. Follow down any stream, east, west or south, and so long as it flows rapidly over rocky or gravelly bottoms all is well, but when, once past the last line of hills, the water begins to flow sluggishly and bayous appear, there the white race begins to decline.

I can notice a big difference in five miles. After various tours in every part of it I am satisfied that all that lowland region belongs by nature to the negroes. In fact, they have taken more than half of it already. In seven counties they outnumber the whites by more than ten to one, and in nearly 300 they are from two to nine to one. The reader who has not noted the rapid transfer of peoples in the south will find food for amazement in the figures of the ninth census and the eleventh. They show that in all that part of the south peculiarly fitted for the white man he is gaining rapidly, while in the bayou region the negro is the gainer. In this exposition one can study the work of the races separately, and even after making a liberal discount we must still admit that the progress of the whole south in the past 15 years has indeed been wonderful. Despite the many delays the exposition seems a marvelous success, and it is peculiarly gratifying to note that thousands of old Federal soldiers were here the first week. Still more is it a pleasure to report their views and catch some of their enthusiasm about the new south.

SHOULD WE ASK FOR THE SUFFRAGE?

BY

MRS. SCHUYLER VAN RENSSELAER.

II.

It is not necessary that every woman should make up her mind, today with regard to the abstract desirability of woman suffrage. But there is a danger that, if they do not think the matter out now, many women will remain in a state of vague interest and uncertainty, distressed perhaps by the thought that they should have asked for their "rights," and perchance made discontented by the idea that, had we all done so, woman's lot would have been improved and our country as a whole would have been benefited.

"I have taken the suffrage side," one of my friends recently told me, "not because I am convinced that woman suffrage is desirable, but because I think that it is bound to come some day, and therefore it is best not to fight against it." But no events dependent upon human action are bound to come, like earthquakes or comets, or the change of the seasons. We may say that some such events are bound to come, if existing conditions do not change. But who can predict positively that any human conditions will not change? And we may say that some things are all but certain to come—like greater freedom in Russia, for example. But even then, if we disapprove of them, it is better to fight against them. If we do not stave them off, we shall profit the world by helping the growth of courage, constancy, public spirit and the reasoning power.

Far from believing that woman suffrage is bound to come because of the present increase of interest in it, many of us hope that just this increase will give it its deathblow. Opposition to it has hitherto been passive, and to a great degree merely instinctive. No one has strongly felt the need to give her reasons against it. Therefore no one still uncertain upon the subject has had the chance to hear both sides and intelligently make up her mind, and few have even been prompted to think about it at all. But if the negative side is now faithfully presented, the current excitement, we feel, is likely in the end to do more to hurt than to help the "cause."

Therefore it is well to ask ourselves a second question: Upon what grounds do its advocates base their demand for woman suffrage?

Many of them do not explain how they think that its possession by the whole of our sex would affect the welfare of the community. They simply declare that we have "a right" to it, and state or imply that the securing and active exercise of any right must result for good.

Even the latter proposition is, however, far from logical. It is not a proposition which conscientious people act upon in private life. When a woman or a man perpetually insists upon personal rights, without considering the expediency of their assertion, she or he is recognized as a discordant element in family life, as a member of society whose influence is pernicious. All family life, all social life, is a system of compromises between the rights of different individuals. And civic life, political life, is a system of compromises between the rights of different individuals and those of different sexes, classes, and communities of people.

The most indisputable personal rights may be infringed for the benefit of a community as a whole. A man may be forced to sell his house if the people need a railroad or a park. That great bulwark of personal liberty, the habeas corpus act, may be thrown down in troublous times. And even the right to safeguard one's life is done away with in times of war. Men are then righteously called upon to face certain death itself. If the power to vote could be proved the indisputable right of every woman, nevertheless no woman should demand it without a firm belief, based upon definite reasons, that its exercise by her sex as a whole would benefit her country as a whole.

But the power to take direct active part in political life is not a right in the true sense of the word. It is not on a par with the right to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." Our present laws do not recognize it as such with regard to men. The corporate intelligence of the country does not interpret it thus. The instant a child, male or female, is born, the law undertakes to protect it in its life, its liberty and its pursuit of happiness. It is protected even against its own parents, should need rise, and the murder of a day old infant is counted a crime as much as the murder of a Lincoln or a Garfield. Of course what the law thus professes and attempts to do it does not perfectly accomplish. It never can perfectly accomplish it as long as individual human beings are imperfect in so many ways. But its theory is clear, and its practice steadily improves. Men and women, adults and children, all are to be equally well protected by the government in so far as the recognized rights of humanity are concerned.

The question whether progress might be swifter, details of legislation and practice might be more rapidly improved, if women could vote, may be left aside for the moment. What I want to show now is that our constitutions, our systems of law, our political beliefs, do not include the power to vote among the indisputable rights even of masculine humanity. If they did, boys would be born with the right of suffrage. They would not have to wait until they were 21 to get it. They would vote by deputy until they had reached years of discretion, just as now, if they are born to an inheritance, they own their property from birth and control it by deputy until they come of age.

Expediency, not right, is the basis of the suffrage. It is inexpedient, our legislators think, that all men should vote before they are 21. Surely the well trained, educated, intelligent boys of New York city, even though they be not more than 10 years old, would make better voters than vicious tramps or stupid foreigners all but wholly ignorant of the English language. But it is felt that more harm than good would result if the suffrage were universally granted to boys or youths, and therefore the most intelligent contentedly stand aside until they come of age.

And thus should we contentedly stand aside all our lives, unless the most careful examination of a most complicated problem, to which past history affords not the slightest guide, seems to assure us that it would be for the greatest good of the greatest number of Americans that all women should vote. Expediency must here again be consulted upon different grounds, of course. Immaturity is the ground in one case, feminality in the other. But in the one case, as in the other, no fundamental human "right" is involved except the right of the greatest number of Americans to the greatest possible measure of life, liberty, and happiness

MEETING AN AUTHOR

THE MAN WHO WROTE "OLIVER BOSWELL'S COURTSHIP."

The Great Man Is Modest About His Work and Sometimes Even Forgets That He Was Written It—Some Extracts Showing His Lovely Style.

[Copyright, 1895, by Edgar W. Nye.]

It has been claimed that young writers without reputation cannot get into print, while old fossils with nothing but a glorious past get all the big prices and monopolize the magazines.

This is not true.

As an instance of this I have just received for review the advance sheets of a story entitled "Oliver Boswell's Courtship In Camp Meeting Time."

Below I give without change the opening page of chapter I. When I say that I have enjoyed this story to the full, I mean every word of it. When I say that I know the author personally, and that he has been in my house, I do not say it to bring myself into public notice, but to satisfy a craving that I know the public must feel to know all that it possibly can, without being rude, of this new writer:

OLIVER BOSWELL'S COURTSHIP—IN CAMP MEETING TIME.

BY SOME ONE.

CHAPTER I.
FOUND HIS LOVER.

Ava Blanche sat at her own window, looking afar off at the green trees that was waving their green mantles timidly in reply to the sitting sun. Her jasmines, roses and other flowers was just blooming, which filled the air with their pleasant smells. The wind was blowing her sunny hair very tenderly. It was now the last day of June. She saw a tall figure of a man appear in front of her with a ticket in his hand. His eyes was as black as a [illegible]. Ava thought he would have made a handsome photo. He stood at the window for a moment till he caught Ava's eye in his own and then disappeared. Ava read the invitation to her mother half an hour later. It was an invitation to Delia Smith's birthday party. Next day, the time set for the party, the same man stood at the gate awaiting Ava's arrival. Just as Ava came tripping along he made her a pleasant bow. "Good morning," he said. "Good morning, Mr. Boswell," said Ava. "Miss Delia Smith said I might have the pleasure of escorting you to the dinner, provided you were willing." "With pleasure," said Ava. "It's a pleasant day for a party, isn't it?" "Quite pleasant indeed. I expect we will have a nice time today," he said as he smiled courteously. "I anticipate such," said Ava.

Why fritter away one's time reading "The Prisoner of Zenda," written by a foreigner, while here in America we have such pure basswood honey right from the great natural North Carolina bee gum of literature?

On first reading this chapter I thought I detected an intimation of carefully concealed humor, but on meeting the author and talking with him I saw at once that such was not the case.

"And what are your literary methods?" I asked as I passed the prunes to him, for we were at table in my own home, and I believed that a conversation between two such men would read well perhaps in a piece I thought of writing for the paper.

"How do you think of so many things to write, pray?" I asked, helping myself to another gourd of champagne, for I am willing to open anything when a literary man comes to see me. "Tell me all about it," I said, emerging from the gourd very much refreshed. "How do you live before you have these thoughts? Do you live plainly, or can you cerebrate on rich food?"

"Well," he said, "when I began writing, I was very poor and dieted a good deal, but now I eat everything that I can get hold of, and then force myself to write whether I feel like it or not. Howells and me are similar in regards to that. We don't believe in inspiration much."

"What were the circumstances under which you wrote 'Oliver Boswell's Courtship?'" I asked.

"Well, I was feeling real good. I don't know as I could ever get off another work like it is if I tried 40 times. I felt out a sight."

"Of course you did not let it turn your head when you awoke to find yourself famous?"

"Oh, my patience, no! I'm just the same exactly. I laugh and cut up around home all the time. I'm the greatest case to carry on ever you saw. Half the time I forget that I wrote 'Oliver Boswell's Courtship' and other works."

"And have you not been criticised by the more ultra and puritanical for your offhand method of introducing Oliver and the heroine? You remember that 'he stood at the window for a moment till he caught Ava's eye in his own and then [illegible]'

"The next day," said I, giving him the pope's nose of the steer with some bit of chaff or other, "he meets her and says 'Good morning,' whereupon Ava says 'Good morning, Mr. Boswell.' Now, for any one but a green goods man or roue from Hendersonville I would say that his manner was informal and de trop. One naturally exclaims while reading it: 'Ah, there, Oliver! Naughty, naughty Ollie.' Did not some one make this criticism in the Brevard Hustler?"

"Possibly so, but honey swat the Malay pants is my motto evil to him that evil thinks. I write of people in the middle walks of life and don't care a cuss for the aristocracy of Flat Rock or Philadelphy. There I'm told that folks wait for an introduction, and even a fireman ain't allowed to come in a house and rescue a young lady from the flames till they change cards, and then if his is a leetle too wide or has 'Mr.' on it when 'Esq.' is the thing she exclaims, 'Welcome, death!' and perishes in the flames."

"Here is a bit that interested me very much," I said, picking up the book from the sewing machine and reading from it while the young author played a sonata on an ear of hot corn:

A few minutes later Oliver and Ava was hurrying down Main street at Marietta. The hours and words passed swiftly with Ava. Oliver talked of lovers' quarrels, sea voyages and everything he could think of to interest her young mind. Ava's mother and father was half a mile behind and Ava was growing lonesome when Oliver [illegible] for a little song:

"There's a lover that lives, and he lives for me,
And I hope some day to see him marching forth by the side of me."

And then, farther on, where the roguish girl sings:

"I be an old maid and sit in the shade,
And I not marry at all;
I'll marry the rich and they get drunk and fall in the ditch,
And I not marry at all;
I'll marry the poor and, they go round begging from door to door
And I not marry at all."

Oliver's voice trembled when he said, "You are not going to be an old maid, are you?" "I don't know," she said. "It depends upon my mind when I get older." "I think old maids have hard times, and I don't think many sit in the shade." "If I were an old maid, I would sit in the shade, but I don't guess I'll be one if I can get married." "Oh, there are plenty of boys that would have you," said Oliver. The day went by sweetly to Ava, for she was loving Oliver more than she cared to tell. Late in the evening they landed at the grounds. Tents was being put up; the crowd was as thick as it possibly could be.

"You would hardly believe it now," the author said, laying down his cob with a sigh and combing out a few kernels of the corn from his long silky mustache with his fork, "that 'Oliver Boswell's Courtship' was refused by an eastern publisher?"

"No!"

"Well, it just was."

"Get out!"

"Yes, it was plumb sent back, with a printed circular inside of it which went on to say that it galded them like sin to send back such good penmanship, but that they had all overplayed themselves and bought up a lot of stuff from Stockton & Howells and By-Jalmer By-Jorth By-Johnson, etc., and would I ever forgive them so's they could look me in the face? I could see by the way they wrote that they felt meechin enough."

"Can you think best with a stub pen, or do you feel more free with a lump of chalk and the underside of a bridge?"

"I write freely on anything and never revise a single line."

"That shows that you are not hidebound by custom. Your grammar also shows that."

"Yes, I hate grammar that is conventional."

"True," I said as my little boy snapped the kodak on both of us as we sat together trying to look like Washington Irving, for I wanted the picture to use in a magazine article and had already borrowed a photograph of neighbor

BEFORE LAYING DOWN THE COB.

Vanderbilt's home here to use as though it were my own in a personal article descriptive of "How a Great Author Feeds His Hens."

"And how you keep up the interest too! The end of this chapter makes one fully determined to read the next, no matter what the cost may be. Listen!"

As Ava left her mother she was somewhat bothered. She had met a preacher on her way, who asked her for the privilege of carrying her to the meeting grounds, but told him she had engaged her company for the whole meeting. She went along the path which she had just come. She wondered where he was going, but did not know he was her mother's acquaintance. He was tall like a sapling, and his coat gave him a pleasant look as he jumped around like a grasshopper. She went on as fast as possible to the back of the tents, where a carriage was waiting for her arrival.

He must indeed be a patient man who can wait for the next chapter, for Oliver, the sport who caught her eyes in his, will have to meet up with a clergyman who has "a coat that gave him a pleasant look."

The author was here again at our house afterward, but as we had been to dinner he did not stay long, preferring to press on up the river, where people are more reckless with their watermelons.

I have not altered one word of the extracts above given, and I assure the reader that the author of "Oliver Boswell's Courtship" is no myth, but that he has dined at my house and smoked a cigar of mine that I did not believe could be smoked by a human being. I had kept it over nine years, and it lay undisturbed even while I was trying seven new colored office boys.

But the author smoked it, and in an interview for publication said that my taste in cigars, wines, horses and literature was "out a sight."

He agrees with Mr. Howells that Dickens is no good.

Just For Fun.

When Trollope was in the postoffice department, a man kept writing the most outrageous and violent letters of complaint about postal arrangements from some remote part of Ireland. Trollope was sent off to investigate, arriving there very wet and hungry one dark winter's night. He was met at the door in the most hospitable manner by a delightful old gentleman, who immediately ordered brandy and water very hot. Then came dinner. Trollope must stay the night. A charming daughter joined in with the old gentleman. After dinner Trollope reluctantly proposed business. The old gentleman was grossly affronted and would not hear of it. The next day Trollope again pressed the old gentleman about his complaint. The old gentleman became very confused. "Well, you see," he said, "the fact is I haven't any complaint; it's all humbug. It is very lonely up here, and so and so, as I like writing letters, I took to writing to the postoffice just to pass the time." Argonaut.

She Knew It.

A middle aged woman called at an insurance office of a provincial town a day or two ago to announce that she wanted to insure her house.

"For how much?" asked the agent.

"Oh, about £200."

"Very well. I'll come up and investigate it."

"I don't know much about insurance," she said.

"It's very plain, ma'am."

"If I'm insured for £200 and the house is burned down I get the money, do I?"

"Certainly."

"And they don't ask who set it afire?"

"Oh, but they do. We shall want to know all about it."

"Then you needn't come up," she said as she rose to go. "I heard there was some catch about it somewhere, and now I see where it is." Tit-Bits.

HE.

Below me in the garden there
She treads the winding path,
And all the world seems [illegible] fair,
Such [illegible] hath.
I am not [illegible] to throw
A kiss, 'twould do no harm,
Since as the thing she'd never know
She could [illegible].

SHE.

There at the window high he works
And with no thought [illegible]
That here among the flowers lurks
A maid who thinks him fair.
Were I to throw a kiss to him
Unmaidenly 'twould be,
But [illegible] no need to him—
If he should fail to see.

BOTH.

Go little kiss [illegible] dear lips
[illegible]
And [illegible]
[illegible]
Then hasten back and [illegible]
Some [illegible]
Fly, [illegible]
[illegible]
